SECURITY AND OPPORTUNITY IN A SOLDIER'S LIFE

Good Food, Steady Pay, Short Hours.

BY CLAY GOWRAN.

What kind of a life does an average soldier in the United States army live? What work does he do? What duties other than warfare is he taught? How much does he earn? What does he do with his free time? What are his chances for a worthwhile career?

To answer these and other questions about the plain, every day soldier, a reporter was sent last week to Fort Sheridan, on the shore of Lake Michigan north of Highwood. Here 900 young recruits who have joined the 61st coast artillery within the last two months are receiving their training.

His orders were to "enlist" in this regiment and to sleep, eat, work, and play with these young soldiers until the questions were answered.

Sergeant Works Fast.

Arriving at the military post before noon one day, the reporter was taken in hand by Sergt. Emil Schlager of Battery F, a veteran of 18 years' service in the army. Sergt. Schlager worked fast. Clothing depots were visited. Supply offices furnished other equipment. Forty-five minutes after he had driven his automobile thru the post gates, the reporter emerged from Battery F barracks in a private's uniform, ready for his first army meal.

It was good. Spareribs and sauerkraut, boiled potatoes, lettuce salad, gravy, two kinds of cake, and coffee. The 153 men of Battery F ate in two shifts. The lieutenants in command of the battery's four platoons lunched on the same foods.

That first afternoon was spent with other new recruits learning how to care for the .30 caliber Springfield rifle, how to make up an army cot, how to fasten a loaded pack, bayonet, and canteen to the cot so that it would be ready for instant use. The instructor was a 23 year old sergeant just finishing his first three year enlistment.

A Dinner at 5 P. M.

Dinner came at 5 p. m. It consisted of vegetable soup, mashed potatoes, turkey à la king, fruit salad or vegetable salad, hot rolls, coffee, and chocolate or pumpkin pie.

"Do you serve meals like this all the time?" Sergt. Schlager was asked.

"Well," [he seemed slightly ashamed] "you see, we used so much of our month's food money for Thanksgiving dinner that we haven't much left, so these meals aren't as good as the boys usually get. Usually we try to get roast beef or pork or steak on the menu."

Soldiers Have Evenings Free.

Evenings are the soldiers' own. A dozen privates of the battery wandered off to the post movie, where soldiers are extended credit until pay day comes. Others with 12 hour passes traveled into Chicago for the night. Twenty or twenty-five, including the reporter, shot pool, played cards, and lounged in the battery's clubroom until 11 o'clock.

Reveille proved to be the worst thing in an artillery man's life. It was blown at 6:15 a. m. Breakfast came at 7 o'clock—ham and eggs, fruit, toast, and coffee.

From 8 to 9 o'clock Battery F was put thru infantry drill by Capt. K. M. Briggs, its commanding officer. Then from 9 to 11:30 Battery F and the seven other units of the 61st practiced field maneuvers in the densely wooded section of the reservation.

Trucks Rumble Into Position.

Battery F loaded its .50 caliber Browning machine guns into 2½ ton trucks and rumbled into position in the regimental line. In the lead was Battery A, with its enormous 800 million candle power searchlights for spotting high flying planes. Batteries B, C, and D—3-inch antiaircraft gun units—followed. The four machine gun batteries brought up the rear.

For two and a half hours the 1,323 men and officers of the 61st concentrated on maneuvers. The 3 inch guns roared into positions under enemy "fire," machine gun batteries slammed their trucks to a stop and hastily deployed to fight off attacking aircraft, field camps were rigged. Men and officers played the game of war.

In the half holiday which followed the morning workout Sergt. Schlager gathered the battery's greenest recruits in one of the spotless barrack

PUPPET REGIME CEDES LAND IN PACT WITH REDS

Grants All Demands Made by Moscow.

MOSCOW, Dec. 2 (AP).—Dictator Stalin tonight concluded a mutual assistance pact with the new communist-sponsored Finnish People's government which granted him concessions that Russia had failed to get in negotiations with the Helsingfors régime of Finland. The pact granted all of Russia's original demands for naval, military and air bases in Finland, for an exchange of territory in Karelia, for territory on the arctic coast, and for political and economic coöperation.

The pact was negotiated in the Kremlin. The negotiations were participated in by Stalin and Otto Kuusinen, head of the Finnish People's government, which the soviet union recognized earlier in the day.

Molotov Signs Pact.

The pact was signed by Premier-Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov and Kuusinen.

[In Helsingfors a Finnish government spokesman described Kuusinen as "the so-called prime minister who has lived for 20 years in Moscow as a traitor to the Finnish cause and at present is seeking revenge by setting up a puppet government at the behest of Russia." The treaty, however, was regarded as important on the theory that it disclosed the soviet program for Finland.]

Shortly after the announcement of the pact, a Red army communique said that soviet troops were continuing their advance into Finland. They were said to have penetrated 19 to 22 miles at some points. Russian troops were said to be pursuing Finnish troops retreating from Petsamo, on the arctic coast. [Finnish advices said the Finns had recaptured Petsamo after an all night march in the snow.] The soviet communique said there were no air operations today because of unfavorable weather. Among the towns said to have been captured by the Reds was Paikola, on the Karelian isthmus.

Terms of Pact.

Under the terms of the pact between Moscow and the Finnish rebel régime, the latter agreed to:

1. Shift the Russian-Finnish border northward from Leningrad and to transfer to Russia 1,537 square miles of territory in the Karelian peninsula.

2. Lease to Russia for 30 years the Hango peninsula, on which is located Finland's Gibraltar of the Baltic, and a number of neighboring islands for the establishment of a soviet naval, air and military base for protection against aggression in the Gulf of Finland.

3. Sell to Russia the islands of Suursaari [Hoglund], Seiskaari, Lavanasaari, Tutersaari [small and big], and Kojivisto [Bierke] in the Gulf of Finland.

4. Sell to Russia parts of the Rybachi and Sredni peninsulas in the arctic.

Russia Cedes Territory.

In return, Russia agreed to:

1. Transfer to the democratic republic of Finland districts of the Karelian peninsula with predominating Karelian population totaling 27,000 square miles.

2. Pay $2,400,000 for railroads transferred to Russia in the swap of Karelian peninsula territory, and $6,000,000 for the territory ceded or leased.

3. Render assistance in armaments and other war materials on favorable terms.

The two governments also agreed to undertake to render each other every assistance, including military, in the event of attack or threat of attack on Finland and also in the event of attack or threat of attack on the soviet union across the territory of Finland on the part of any European power.

Hostile Alliances Barred.

Another provision stated that the contracting parties would refrain from concluding any alliances or participate in any coalitions directed against the other.

"Exchange of instruments of ratification," the pact concluded, will be effected within the shortest possible space of time in the capital of Finland—the city of Helsingfors.

It referred to the Helsingfors government as the former plutocratic power in Finland and charged that it had created a most dangerous seat of war near the soviet border which "is being eliminated thru the heroic struggle of the Finnish people and thru the efforts of the Red army of the U. S. S. R."

SWEDEN TIGHTENS DEFENSE TO MEET THREATS OF WAR

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Dec. 2 (AP).—Strengthening of Sweden's military preparedness was ordered today coincident with unconfirmed reports that a national government would be formed to preserve neutrality and meet problems of the Russian-Finnish conflict.

Carnival-like novelty and coffee stands with band music to attract the crowds were erected in a square to raise funds for Swedish forces. Nearly 600 Swedes enlisted to fight for Finland, while Finnish students and workmen crowded their country's legation to volunteer for service against the Russians.

The new military measures were reported primarily to concern Noorland, the northernmost of the three great divisions of the nation, the Island of Gotland, and coast defense. The Island of Gotland is "the Malta of the Baltic," off the east coast of Sweden.

Postpone Army Dismissals.

Sweden already had decided to postpone indefinitely the proposed dismissal of certain military units. Reserves recently were called to begin 11 weeks of training that began yesterday.

Private estimates were that Sweden now has more than 100,000 troops under arms out of a maximum reserve power of 500,000. It appeared, however, that general mobilization had not begun.

"Our one hope is to keep calm and avoid sensational statements in maintaining our neutrality," said one Swedish official. "We are small—too small—to be of any great aid to Finland. We must make every effort to maintain neutrality."

To Take Americans from Finland.

A reliable source said it was likely a national government would be formed to add Conservatives and Liberals to the cabinet now composed of representatives of Labor and Peasant parties.

The sighting of Russian planes twice within the last two days over Finland near the Swedish coast has added to the anxiety in Sweden.

United States Minister Frederick A. Sterling announced a Swedish-American steamer under charter would reach Abo [Turku], Finland, tomorrow for removal of Americans connected with the American legation in Helsingfors.

Sterling said about 45 persons, including families of the legation staff, would be brought to Stockholm.

Danes' Anger Mounts.

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, Dec. 2 [U. P.].—Anger over the Russian invasion of Finland mounted here tonight. Three thousand students demonstrated in front of the Finnish legation and heard their spokesman, Raj Munk, Danish author, declare:

"Never have we felt Finland to be more a part of Scandinavia than now."

Finnish Minister Pogola, deeply moved, replied:

"I feel this demonstration is inspired not only by sympathy but by the wrath every nation must feel at Russia's infamous attack."

A crowd stoned the Russian legation, smashing windows, during the day.

THIS IS REASON FINNISH TOWNS HAVE 2 NAMES

Most names of Finnish places have two spellings, Finnish and Swedish. This is because Swedish was for a long time the official language of that part of Scandinavia which, after the world war, became the Republic of Finland, or Suomi.

Now, however, while Helsingfors and other of the older names are still largely used, both spellings theoretically are correct. In the following examples, the first is the Finnish spelling.

Helsinki—Helsingfors; Hanko—Hango; Viipuri—Viborg; Kasko—Kaskinen; Turku—Abo; Oulu—Uleaborg; Kristiina—Kristinestad; Porvoo—Borga; Mikkeli—St. Michel; Tampere—Tammerfors; Kakisalmi—Keksholm; Raahe—Brahestad; Lappeenranta—Villmanstrand.

The Russians early in this century made an effort to establish the Russian language in Finland, but failed.

BULLETIN.

HELSINGFORS, Finland, Dec. 3, Sunday.—Finland expects more violent air attacks by the Russians. This was indicated when the government late last night ordered the evacuation of all major cities in the southern part of the country. The order includes women, children, the aged, the weak, and many others. It is estimated 230,000 citizens will have left Helsingfors by late tomorrow. The fleeing residents were ordered to spray roofs, interiors and fronts of houses with water to form a coating of ice to counteract incendiary bombs.

HELSINGFORS, Finland, Dec. 3, Sunday (AP).—Finland today appealed to the United States and the rest of the world for assistance "more powerful than sympathy" in its war with soviet Russia.

At the same time, he reiterated Finland's desire for peace and offered to participate in negotiations to that end, but nevertheless, he said, any one who believes that Finland can be brought by force to make concessions that will amount to the loss of independence is mistaken. The independence and integrity of Finland, he said, cannot be destroyed by the means to which Russia has resorted.

Finnish Army Battles On.

As the foreign minister spoke, the Finnish army continued stubborn resistance against the invading Russians. The Finns reported that they had made a strategic withdrawal on the Karelian isthmus after inflicting heavy losses on the advancing Russians.

"The sympathy shown for our country by many nations is such a reality it is surpassing foreign politics," Tanner said in his broadcast. "For as well as confirming our confidence in the justice of our cause, the struggle we are engaged in now instead of being only the fight of a small nation for existence, begins a symbolic struggle on behalf of human justice.

"The word 'sympathy' has seemed to us to be directed not so much to us but to a higher purpose which the civilized opinion of the world has sensed in our struggle.

Believes Justice Will Prevail.

"The Finnish people still retain their belief that justice will prevail in the end and that the independence and integrity of Finland cannot be destroyed by the means to which our eastern neighbor has resorted these last days.

"By our consciousness that the civilized world, with the American people and the government of the United States in the van, has by the many different expressions of sympathy with our people given us this assurance, this fight in the far north is not only yours but that of countless fellow human beings all over the world.

"The Finnish government will not refuse to take part in negotiations for the restoration of peace. Nevertheless, any one who believes that the Finnish people can be brought by the threat of force and the terror launched to make concessions that will amount in reality to the loss of their independence, is mistaken. We shall defend ourselves against such forceful menace and we cannot bring ourselves to believe that civilized world will not find some means which are more powerful than its invaluable sympathy."

Abandon Five Villages.

The Finnish army in its withdrawal on the Karelian isthmus abandoned five villages, military authorities announced. The abandoned villages, which the Finns said had been held only temporarily to delay the advance of the Russian troops, were

FOUR POLICE SQUADS RUSH TO SCENE; FIND GUN MEN UP IN ARMS

Four squads of Willow Springs county highway police set out hurriedly last night after an excited telephone caller said there was a shooting at 123d street and 96th avenue, Willow Springs. They found the 131st infantry of the Illinois National Guard out for maneuvers and blazing away like everything.

DOG AND CANARY KILLED; CAUSE 2 ECHOES IN LAW

Rochester, Ind., Dec. 2 [Special].—Marion Clark, a farmer, sued James Nickels, another farmer, for $75 today for shooting his hound dog, a trained coon hunter. Clark said the dog had merely trailed a 'coon onto Nickels' land and was doing no harm to anything except the 'coon when Nickels blazed away with a shotgun.

Wife Wants a New Law.

Pana, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—A. D. Day, widely known sportsman, was showing a shotgun in his home to a friend today when it accidentally discharged, blowing Mrs. Day's prize canary and its cage thru a plate glass window. More in sorrow than in anger, Mrs. Day said she would ask State Senator John W. Fribley to introduce a bill in the next assembly making it a felony to carry a loaded gun into a dwelling.

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 2 (AP).—Tax assessment returns filed with the Kentucky revenue department show:

Eight counties are without a single chicken.

Two have no horses and 32 have no horse drawn vehicles.

Four have no musical instruments or radios.

Twelve have no jewelry, gold, or silver.

Five have no books and no libraries.

Four have no farm machinery or implements.

Property owners file voluntary assessment returns. The revenue department is skeptical.

Lyons Speaks, and Weather Is Chilly, Too

BY GEORGE TAGGE.

A raw wind whipped the topcoat of Richard J. Lyons, Republican candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, when he climbed on the speaking platform at Dickens street and Austin avenue yesterday. He was met by the frigid stares of assembled Democrats, including Ald. Richard M. Walsh [36th], Roger J. Kiley [37th], and Walter J. Orlikoski [35th].

Richard J. Lyons.

Lyons and the others had been invited to speak at the dedication of the Austin avenue underpass, a $1,210,000 project constructed by the city administration with the aid of a grant from the Public Works administration.

Dedications Political Property.

The invitations were issued by the Austin Avenue Opening committee. Secretary John O. Henry canceled Lyons' invitation when, he said, Democrats explained to him that dedicatory services are political property.

"We didn't know whether Lyons was coming," said Stephen Blust, committee chairman. "Today Ald. Walsh told me to let him speak if he appeared."

When Walsh had his turn at the microphone, he told the audience of 1,000 that because of the weather he would not prolong his remarks. He wished the audience well. Ald. Orlikoski said he wished he could give all of them a drink of their choice to warm their bones. Ald. Kiley just waved.

Lyons arose, swept off his hat, and began to address the crowd bareheaded.

No Christmas Gift, Says Lyons.

"It seems that many people were nervous about what I'd say here," he said. "I assure my good Democratic colleagues I will say nothing to detract from them.

"While we congratulate the North Austin community upon the completion of this underpass, it may not be amiss for me to remind you that this $1,210,000 structure is not a gift from Santa Claus nor yet from Uncle Sam.

"All you have received is a small share of what has been taken away from you. The people of Illinois are the third largest group of contributors to federal taxes in the United States. Citizens of Chicago, thru gasoline and other taxes, pay the full cost of construction such as this."

Business Men Credited.

Lyons said that credit for success of a 25 year movement to build the 658 foot tunnel under the railroad tracks should go to neighborhood business men, such as Blust, Sam Baumgard, and Joseph Chaban of the Hudson Park Improvement association.

The aldermen took it in silence. But the applause showed that the audience liked it. That, said Lyons, was all he cared about.

HOOVER ADVOCATES CALLING AMERICAN ENVOY FROM RUSSIA

Palo Alto, Cal., Dec. 2 (AP).—Withdrawal of the American ambassador to Russia because of Russia's invasion of Finland was advocated today by former President Herbert Hoover in a statement issued at his home.

"Mr. Roosevelt gave recognition to the communist government by treaty and the exchange of ambassadors," said Hoover. "That gave them standing as a decent member of the family of nations.

"We long since have withdrawn our ambassador to the Nazi government of Germany. Is the assault on the freedom of Finland, and the dead women and children in its streets any less a shock to us than the Nazi barbarities? We should, as was done in Germany, leave a routine official to represent us in Moscow and withdraw the dignity of our ambassador."

7,397 City Auto Licenses Sold in First Three Days

City Collector Louis Rixmann reported yesterday that 7,397 city vehicle licenses for 1940 have been sold since Thursday, when they went on sale. During the first three days of sale last year 2,484 were sold. Rixmann attributed the increase to the distribution of applications at the recent automobile show and to the fact that applications were mailed all license holders last week.

Jappinen, Mastonen, Lirkial, the Island of Sacroinen, and Terijoki.

[Terijoki is the town in which Russia announced a Finnish People's government had been organized.]

"The aggressors suffered heavy losses," a military communique said. "The enemy made several attempts to capture our positions, but the troops have been able in most cases to throw them back. The hardest fighting of the day was at Suojarvi [about 50 miles north of Lake Ladoga on the Russian-Finnish border.]"

Many soviet tanks were said to have been destroyed yesterday in addition to 36 previously reported.

[The United Press said the Finnish communique charged that Russian officers in the Salmi sector north of Lake Ladoga had been forced to shoot two soviet soldiers to force the troops to attack. Machine gunners were said to be behind the Russian to keep them from falling back.]

The government meantime decided to lay its case before the league of nations. The decision was reached during two meetings of the cabinet presided over by Premier Risto Ryti.

Snow Falls in Capital.

Snow fell in Helsingfors, bringing a respite from the soviet air raids which have reduced some parts of the city to a shambles. There were no bombings yesterday on the capital or other cities.

[Dispatches received at Stockholm, Sweden, from Helsingfors late yesterday stated that a soviet plane had dropped pamphlets outside the city threatening mass bombing of the Finnish capital unless it surrendered unconditionally. The dispatch also stated that 50 airplanes purchased in Italy had been landed in Finland.]

Refugees crowded roads leading out of the capital and women and children packed the railroad station waiting for trains. Business was almost at a standstill and few persons were on the streets. Relatives and friends of missing persons searched in the tangled wreckage of apartment buildings for some clue of their fate.

A government spokesman described Otto Kuusinen, head of the soviet-recognized rebel government at Terijoki, as "the so-called prime minister who lived for 20 years in Moscow as a traitor to the Finnish cause and at present is seeking revenge." Kuusinen was a founder of the Finnish communist party.

Russaroe fortress at Hango was reported undamaged despite heavy bombardment by Russian warships, one of which was reported sunk by defense batteries.

[One report identified the sunken vessel as the 8,500 ton cruiser Kirov; a Reuter (British news agency) dispatch later said, however, the Kirov was afloat and that it was an unidentified Russian destroyer which sank.]

Rout Parachute Troops.

KIRKENES, Norway, Dec. 2 (AP).—Finnish troops were reported today to have cleared invading Russian forces from the entire Petsamo district on Finland's Arctic coast.

[Moscow reported that the Finns were in retreat in the Petsamo district, with Russian troops in pursuit.]

Soviet losses were said to exceed 150 dead. Russian reinforcements were understood to be en route for a new drive against the Finns along the northern coast. Recapture of the seaport, which fell to the Russians yesterday after troops were landed by parachute, was accomplished after an all night march thru deep snow o nroadless mountains by Finnish infantrymen, civilian refugees reported.

The Russian troops were reported by the refugees to have suffered another setback in a battle near Salmijarvi, near the Norwegian frontier, about 15 miles south of here. Nickel mines owned by the International Nickel Company of Canada were abandoned in the area and it was understood Finnish troops were ordered to blow them up rather than surrender them to Russian forces.

[The New York office of the company announced receipt of a cable from I. J. Simcox, American manager of its Finnish properties, indicating that all Americans and Canadians employed at the plant had left Finland. He said the property had not been damaged thus far.]

The snow covered terrain prevented either side from bringing artillery units into the Petsamo district.

Refugees said the equipment and clothing of the Red army indicated that the Russians were not fully prepared to withstand the rigors of an arctic campaign. Many were reported suffering with frozen feet.

Flyers Attack Refugees.

Finns who fled toward the Norwegian border in motor buses camouflaged with white bed sheets to correspond with the snow were reported attacked by low flying Russian planes.

Canadian and British engineers in charge of the nickel mines said the Finns were firing houses and buildings to impede the Russians.

Several hundred refugees already had arrived and a steady stream continued to flow into border towns. About 300 women and children, crowded into trucks driven by young boys, crossed the ice and snow to the frontier town of Svanik yesterday.

[In London it was reported medical supplies and serums were being flown from England to the battlefields in a plane piloted by Laurin Zilliacus, 44 years old, who had sought to enlist in the British army, but was rejected because of his age.]

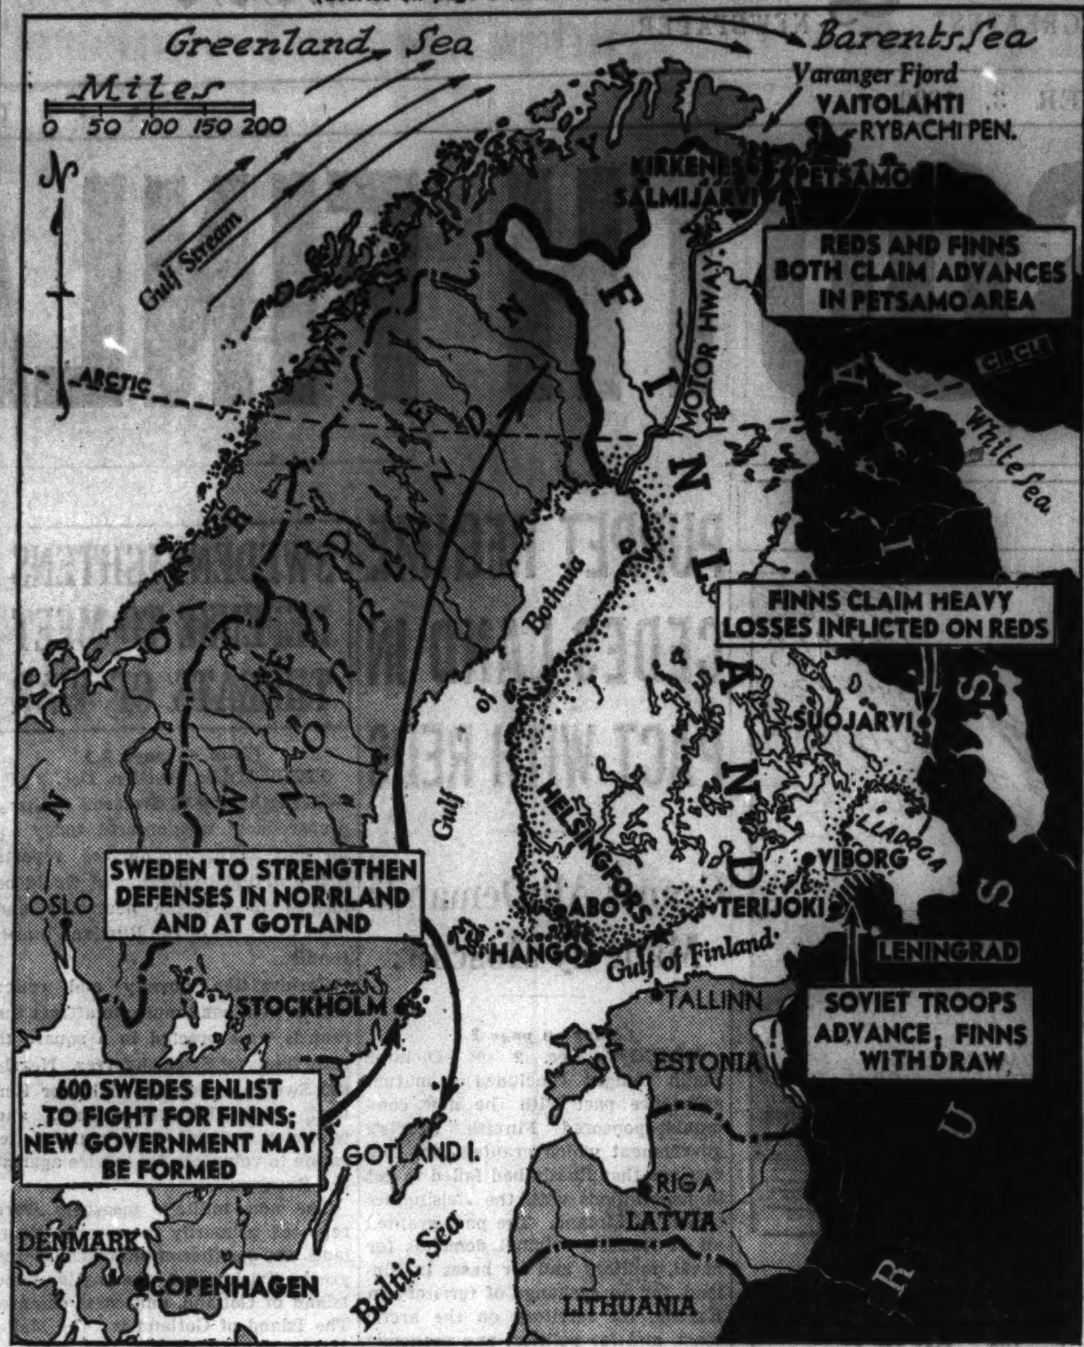
There were unconfirmed reports that British warships had been seen in the Arctic ocean near Petsamo, arousing speculation as to possibility of Russian-British friction.

Day's Warfare of Soviet Russians and Finns

(Stories on page 1 and in adjoining column.)



Principal events of the third day of the war between soviet Russia and Finland are told in captions on the map. Not all places mentioned in the news are shown on the map because of the relatively small size of the Karelian isthmus and because some villages are not shown on available maps.

FINN-RED BATTLE SCENE A GARDEN SPOT IN ARCTIC

Petsamo Has a History of Centuries of War.

The territory and the town of Petsamo, now the scene of sharp fighting in the soviet invasion of Finland, owe their importance to a prank of the Gulf stream, which originates some 8,000 miles away. Altho the town is nearly 200 miles north of the arctic circle, in the summer time the hills are bright with the flowers of softer climates, growing among the dark rocks by the fjords of the Barents sea.

The Varanger fjord upon which the small town of Petsamo is located is partly ice free all year and the town, together with the nearby port of Vaitolahti, at the tip of the Rybachi peninsula, give Finland access to the Barents sea and the Arctic ocean and permit her to develop a commerce not dependent upon the gulfs of Bothnia and Finland and the Baltic sea.

Build Highway to Arctic.

The value of this ice free arctic region in peace and war has not escaped the Finnish government and extensive plans have been laid for extension of the port facilities at these points. The only important step taken thus far is the completion of an excellent motor highway ending at Petsamo.

The town at present has only a few hundred inhabitants. During the tourist season in recent years many British and American motorists have used the highway to enjoy the unique experience of passing the arctic circle and reaching arctic waters on a good modern motor highway.

The harbor facilities have not yet been fully developed. The International Nickel company has been extending its mining properties in the Petsamo region during the last few years.

Former Russian Territory.

The Petsamo region forms a corridor about twenty miles wide between Norwegian and soviet territory and came into political importance after the world war at the same time as, and for much the same reason as the famous Polish corridor. It was ceded to Finland by the soviets as part of the treaty signed at Dorpat in Estonia on Oct. 14, 1920.

The soviet government had vigorously resisted the moves of the Finns to obtain the Petsamo corridor but were forced to yield because of the strategic necessities of the moment.

Owing to its obvious advantages as an open port the year around, the Petsamo region has been a battle ground for centuries. Petsamo was founded about 1550 by a Greek orthodox monk named Trifon. The name is perpetuated to this day in the village of Trifona, which forms the actual dock region of Petsamo.

Changed Hands Several Times.

In 1589 the Swedes and Finns, under the leadership of a peasant named Pekka Vesainen, captured and sacked the region, only to be ejected at a later date by Danish and Norwegian freebooters. By a treaty signed in 1836 Norway acquired the harbor and a small strip of the hinterland. Later the territory came under the sway of the czars of Russia.

While most of the inhabitants of Finland are Lutherans, the Skoltje Lapps who live in the Petsamo region have clung to the religion of the monk Trifon and for the most part are of the Greek orthodox faith.

Finnish Rebels Yield to Soviet

Major provisions of the mutual assistance pact concluded by Dictator Stalin of soviet Russia yesterday with the communist sponsored rebel government of Finland are indicated on the map. The black blocks in the inset indicate the relative sizes of the mainland areas which the two parties agreed to transfer.

FINNS OF CHICAGO WEEP AND CHEER FOR HOMELAND

BY MARCIA WINN.

Long before the Russians came by air, by sea, and by parachute to attack little Finland the Finnish-Americans of Chicago had planned the benefit musical they held last night in Lincoln hall, 4217 Lincoln avenue.

Elmer A. Forsberg.

The only difference was that they had planned a gay affair. It wasn't.

The Russians struck just a week before the Finns' 22d anniversary of their independence, the group was reminded by Consul Elmer A. Forsberg, professor at the Art institute, who has served as Finland's consul here since 1924—always without pay.

The white haired consul, the blue rosette of the White Rose of Finland in his lapel, paused and looked over his audience. There were men and women, young and old. Above them was Finland's white flag with its wide cross of ultramarine. The consul smiled.

"During these 22 years," he continued, "Finland has made wonderful progress in the rehabilitation of her industries, in the breaking of new land for farms, in culture and in the arts. Above all, she has made a name for herself and a friendship that lives thruout the world."

That was about all, but the tears began to flow. Vice Consul Ernest L. Knuti began to give details of the war, and the tears seeped down openly. Every one had a brother, a sister, a nephew, an aunt . . . "Helsingfors . . . Viipuri . . . Kotka . . . Abo," came his words, and then, as he turned to leave the stage, "Elakoon Suomi!"

"Elakoon Suomi!" These were magic words. The 1,500 roared them back at him again and again. Where were their tears, their sighs, their fumblings for handkerchiefs? "Long live Finland!" were their words, strong and confident.

LIFE IN FINLAND'S BOMB SCARRED CAPITAL IS TOLD

Work of Clearing Debris Already Started.

BY LYNN HEINZERLING.

HELSINGFORS, Dec. 2 (AP)—Only the clatter of workmen's shovels, the hiss of water from firemen's hoses and the commands of soldiers were heard today as débris cleaning squads took charge of a bomb wrecked section of Helsingfors that two days ago was a flourishing business center teeming with life.

Two days of invasion by Russians had left Helsingfors badly scarred by air attack. I walked thru a blackened, war marked section where bombs had ripped apartment houses and knocked out windows half a mile away.

At Hietalahti square, the shattered walls of the Institute of Technology stood out sharply. The interior of the building had been wrecked. Two professors were killed and it was feared many students as well.

Walls Cracked and Bulging.

Wreckage blocked Loennrot street. A sad faced porter silently took me into the court of his apartment building and pointed to the walls about us, cracked and bulging. Singed curtains fluttered from the windows. Where a wall had been knocked out the living room and bedroom furniture could be seen in a heap.

A bomb had torn thru the building, blasting a huge crater in the basement floor.

Russian Legation Damaged.

The Russian legation near the square lost all its windows. A Lutheran church and a German school were destroyed. Huge chunks of solid granite were ripped out of the stony Finnish soil and thrown about like marbles. Bomb fragments ripped out bricks and chipped granite foundations of buildings far from where the missiles exploded.

The force of one explosion was so severe that, tho it occurred several blocks away from the hotel where I am staying, part of the hotel's skylight dropped into the lounge. No one was injured. After the first raiders attacked huge clouds of smoke soon darkened the capital.

Crater Dug Out of Stone.

Near the entrance to one of the underground shelters the Finns had placed about the city I saw a huge crater dug out of stone by a bomb.

About 4 a. m. on the second day of the war I managed to get a ride in an army car to Grannkulla, where the American legation set up temporary headquarters and many refugees were quartered.

Men and women, some with children, were sleeping on benches, chairs, the floor, and the hard rubbing tables in the massage rooms of the place which ordinarily is a bathing establishment.

I was able to sleep three hours in a chair before returning to Helsingfors by train. Train service is irregular.

Ride to Safety in a Hearse.

Along the roads leading west out of Helsingfors almost all kinds of conveyances could be seen bearing refugees. Many of the older model cars had broken down.

An officer supervising the removal of refugees said six Finnish children rode to a safety zone in a hearse.

Stoic Finns were trying to go about their tasks in the capital as tho nothing had happened, but this obviously was difficult. Trim waitresses in the hotel where I live usually wore high heeled shoes; today they wore rough, heavy shoes and thick, woolen socks to be ready for any emergency.

The early darkness in Helsingfors is particularly trying when air alarms are sounded and pedestrians are forced to feel their way to shelters.

$10,000 Sent to Finland by American Red Cross

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—The American Red Cross today appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of medical supplies to be used in Finland. The money was cabled to the British Red Cross, which arranged to send supplies to Finland by airplane.

Russian Plane Equipped to Carry Soldiers

CHRISTMAS TRUCE URGED BY POPE, BERLIN REPORTS

Nazis Doubt if Powers Will Consent.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Dec. 2.—"God's truce for Christmas" was proposed today by Pope Pius XII. to Germany, France, and England.

Msgr. Cesare Orsenigo, papal nuncio to Germany, presented the plea for a truce to the German government today. Pope Pius suggested the truce should last from Friday, Dec. 22, to Wednesday, Dec. 27.

[Authoritative vatican circles denied last night at Vatican City that Pope Pius had proposed a Christmas truce. The papal delegation at London said it had no knowledge of the truce proposal.]

Berlin Doubts Agreement.

Diplomats in Berlin doubt whether the belligerents will agree to a Christmas truce. Radical Nazis expressed the keenest hope that "by Christmas Finland will have been punished for her failure to side openly with Germany and the soviets in this war," while conservatives concentrated their warlike expressions on denunciations and threats against England and its neutral friends.

Chancellor Adolf Hitler is eager to conclude a new concordat with the Roman Catholic church. He holds that the concordat signed in 1933 by himself and Franz von Papen, now ambassador to Turkey, is no longer adapted to present needs. To "reduce the misunderstandings" between churchmen and the Nazi government, the Nazis suggest that a new contract be drawn.

Vatican Displays Reserve.

This, the Nazis hope, would create the impression among faithful Catholics in Germany and Catholic foreign countries that relations between church and state had returned to normal. The vatican is displaying great reserve, a number of Catholics declaring they fear a new concordat would "not prove more effective for the church than the first one."

Nazi government spokesmen try to practice rigid reserve on the question of the Russo-Finnish war, tho they could not refrain from seizing upon it to deliver a verbal broadside against England and "certain statesmen in other countries who cannot have good consciences on the Finnish question," because "thru their applause and expressions of sympathy they encouraged Finland to resist Russia's demands. They applaud the prospective fighters, but are not willing to enter the arena themselves." Listeners took this as a reference to President Roosevelt, tho officials refused to elucidate.

Finn "Ingratitude" Assailed.

While the Wilhelmstrasse [foreign office] refused to comment on the Russo-Finnish conflict, Germans administering areas of the former Poland are less reticent. They state that "Finland, which owes her freedom to Germany, showed no understanding for the liberation of Germany from the fetters of Versailles under Hitler's guidance. Nazi Germany was insulted and maligned in Finland almost as much as in countries which are Germany's strongest opponents. Ingratitude not only is one of the nastiest human traits, but usually gets avenged."

CANADIAN SOLDIERS ADVANCE AND TAKE A CLUB—TO PIECES

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 2 [U. P.]—Military and city police today investigated a smoothly executed attack by 100 soldiers on the Hollywood dine and dance club last night. The attack was believed to have been staged in revenge for injuries suffered by an enlisted man in the roadhouse on Thursday night.

The soldiers marched to the club in formation, wheeled smartly into the drive leading to it and then began wrecking it. They smashed three plate glass windows, hurled bricks into piles of dishes, overturned tables, broke chairs, ripped upholstery into bits, and broke fixtures. The men fell in again and paraded smartly back to their quarters at Queen's park.

The club had been closed early and no patrons were present.

CHARGES ARMED JAPS TAKE OVER CANADIAN ISLAND

VICTORIA, B. C., Dec. 2 [U. P.]—Royal Canadian police began an investigation of conditions on Galiano Island today following charges of Canadian fishermen that armed crews from Japanese fishing boats had driven them from their property.

Arrow Locates Island Invaded by Japs.

The charge was made by Maj. J. Lennox MacFarlane of Victoria in communications to newspapers. He said "a number of armed Japanese fishing boats invaded Galiano Island, drove settlers off the land, set up a fish curing plant surrounded with armed guards, and forced residents to make detours to avoid being fired upon."

There are about 32,000 Japanese in British Columbia, most of them centering around Vancouver and Galiano Island.

MOSCOW DIRECTS U. S. REDS, DIES COMMITTEE TOLD

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—Jay Lovestone, former secretary of the communist party in this country, told the Dies committee today that the policies of American communists were dictated by the desires of Moscow.

Jay Lovestone. [A. P. Wirephoto.]

In response to questions by J. B. Matthews, committee investigator, Lovestone said that while he had no documentary proof, he felt sure that the American League for Peace and Democracy was a tool of the communist party and that the American Youth congress and the American Student union were subject to communist control.

Lovestone, who testified he was deposed as general secretary of the party by Stalin in 1929 after being held virtually a prisoner in Moscow, was the committee's last scheduled witness. The committee's authority ends Jan. 3.

PRESIDENT BANS SALES OF PLANES TO SOVIET RUSSIA

Sets Up Moral Embargo Because of Bombing.

BY WILLARD EDWARDS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—In a statement obviously aimed at soviet Russia, President Roosevelt today invoked a moral embargo on shipment of airplanes to nations which bomb civilian populations.

The President called upon American manufacturers to bear in mind, when negotiating contracts for export, the American government's policy of condemning air attacks upon unarmed citizens in unfortified cities. His statement was made public after he conferred with Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

A short time after the President's statement was made public the state department gave out a report stating that H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, American minister to Finland, had witnessed on Thursday "indiscriminate bombing" by Russian planes over Helsingfors [Helsinki], the Finnish capital.

Says People Condemn Attacks.

Mr. Roosevelt's statement follows:

"The American government and the American people have for some time pursued a policy of wholeheartedly condemning the unprovoked bombing and machine gunning of civilian populations from the air.

"The government hopes, to the end that such unprovoked bombings shall not be given material encouragement in the light of recent recurrence of such acts, that American manufacturers and exporters of airplanes, aeronautical equipment and materials essential to airplane manufacture will bear this in mind before negotiating contracts for the exportation of these articles to nations obviously guilty of such unprovoked bombing."

Stephen T. Early, White House secretary, in releasing the President's statement said he wanted to take the opportunity to call public attention to "the fine coöperation given by American manufacturers and exporters to the government's policy as outlined in this statement."

President's Third Utterance.

The moral embargo has no force of law, but it was quickly apparent that the airplane industry in general would comply with it, as it has with a similar embargo on sale of warplanes to Japan. Most major manufacturing companies immediately indicated that they would follow the government's wishes.

Today's statement was the President's third pronouncement on the Finnish-Russian dispute. He first offered the good offices of the United States of America in an attempt to avert hostilities, altho the soviet army already had started its invasion of Finland. Secondly, he voiced censure of the bombing of civilian populations. Both statements were ignored by the soviets, except that soviet Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov remarked that the President's appeal was "pointless."

Irate at Molotov Comment.

Secretary Early indicated that Mr. Roosevelt was irate at Molotov's remark. "I don't see that that constitutes an answer," Early said. "You might ask the dead civilians how pointless it has been."

Early disclosed that Finland had replied orally to the President's plea and was preparing a formal reply.

President Roosevelt took no action today toward invoking the neutrality act under which he is required to name nations between whom a state of war exists.

Assails Roosevelt Policy.

"It is quite understandable why the Roosevelt administration obviously is embarrassed over the tragic course of events in the relations of Finland and Russia," said Representative Harold Knutson [R., Minn.], "for part of the blame at least rests squarely upon the shoulders of the Roosevelt administration itself.

"By officially recognizing the soviet régime in 1933 and resuming diplomatic relations with Moscow, over the protests of Republicans and other loyal Americans, the New Deal measurably strengthened the hand of the dictator, Stalin, and helped build up the power of absolutism in Russia which is being so ruthlessly used today.

"With the prestige of the United States as its close friend, soviet Russia became stronger and more arrogant in the affairs of Europe. No offer of good offices or pious expressions of sympathy will enable the administration to escape its share of responsibility for the tragedy which has overtaken Finland."

The Inquiring Reporter

The Question.

Do you think Russia was justified in attacking Finland?

Where Answered.

In the loop.

The Answers.

Mrs. Ruth Eckert, 2056 Kenmore avenue, registered nurse—Definitely not. Finland has been nonaggressive. They haven't quarreled with Russia. They have been an honorable nation. Russia should not take advantage of Finland just for her own selfish reasons.

James Rocks, 4855 Iowa street, a salesman—I don't believe Russia was justified in attacking Finland. I don't think Russia had cause to take such action. Finland has been a peaceful country and is entitled to continue as a nation. The Finns are to be congratulated for holding out.

Miss Olga Didenko, 2620 North Springfield avenue, packing clerk—Absolutely not. Finland is a small, peaceful nation, and Russia is just taking advantage of the European war to further her gains. The Scandinavian countries have always been peaceful.

Andy Peterson, 3334 Dickens avenue, chief clerk in the coroner's office—Russia had no right to attack Finland. The Russians are taking advantage of their strength to take over a smaller nation. Finland has never bothered other nations.

George Sanoica, 5357 Sunnyside avenue, clerk—Russia is not justified in trying to take over property that belongs to somebody else. It seems too bad that the Scandinavian countries that have always been peaceful should be threatened by aggressors.

RUSSIANS SPEND $919,000 ON WAR GOODS IN AMERICA

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 [Special].—Following President Roosevelt's moral embargo against Russia, a survey today of war material purchases by foreign countries showed that the secretary of state licensed for export to the soviet during the 10 months ending Oct. 31 a total of $919,922 worth of aircraft and associated equipment.

Sales totaling $1,318,654 to Finland were approved during the same period. These included rifles, revolvers, ammunition, aircraft, and aircraft equipment.

Similar material constituted sales of $20,371 to Denmark and $35,126 to Norway, while Sweden's purchases of $1,187,218 worth of war implements were made up mostly of fighting planes. The Netherlands bought arms and war implements, including combat planes, valued at $5,358,333.

The grand total of war material purchases by foreign countries in America during the 10 months was $49,748,571. France headed the list of purchasers, buying $11,510,159 worth of goods. Britain was second, with $5,954,136; the Netherlands was third, and China fourth, with $4,584,732.

British Plane Rounds Up Widely Scattered Convoy

LONDON, Dec. 2 [U. P.].—A single royal air force coastal command plane turned "sheep dog" to merchant ships today, rounding up a scattered convoy carrying 100,000 tons of foodstuffs. The plane was sent out to locate the convoy and found that it had scattered because of a threatened submarine attack. It regathered the ships in a search over a 50 mile area. The ships had hesitated to use radio for fear a submarine would determine their positions.

Germany Completes Plans for Strict Segregation.

BERLIN, Dec. 2 (AP).—Nearly 2,000,000 Jews in greater Germany and Poland will be transferred to the Jewish reservation in eastern Poland set apart by Adolf Hitler, authoritative sources said today.

The transfer of these people to a segregated district around Nisko, on the San river, a small Polish town on the new German-Russian demarcation line, is being carried out under Heinrich Himmler, head of the SS [Elite Guard] and chief of all German police.

The following groups of Jews are to be settled there just as rapidly as conditions permit: 150,000 from the protectorate of Bohemia-Moravia, 65,000 from Vienna, 30,000 from Posen and West Prussia, recently annexed from Poland, and 200,000 from the "altreich"—the German realm as it was before expansion began with the annexation of Austria.

To Evict Polish Jews.

Besides, approximately 1,500,000 Polish Jews are to be evicted forcibly from their homes in cities and villages which are to become parts of the Polish state devised by Hitler.

The GSP, or secret police, has laid upon the Jewish community in each town or village the responsibility for organizing and financing the exodus.

Each deported Jew may take along 300 marks [$120], only such personal belongings as will go into a large suitcase, and essential household goods, especially bedding, cooking utensils and such tools useful in building barracks and primitive homes.

Towns and villages of the region around Nisko are being abandoned as quickly as possible by Poles, Germans, and Ukrainians, and the dwellings, many showing the effects of the German-Polish war, turned over to the Jews. The Jews are to be strictly segregated from the rest of the people under German jurisdiction.

To Effect Transfer by April.

Germany hopes to complete the resettlement movement by April 1, 1940. Regular transports have started from Vienna and Bohemia-Moravia but nothing apparently has been done yet to move Jews out of the German reich proper.

Just how the Jews in the proposed reservation are to find means of subsistence appears not yet to have been determined. Most of them are told they will first be taken to a camp and taught a trade or handicraft. Whatever property a Jew leaves behind, whether in real estate or a business, must be turned over to the Jewish community in charge of its liquidation.

RELAXING OF LAW ON DRUNK DRIVER URGED BY JUDGE

Judge Joseph B. Hermes announced yesterday in Safety court he favored amending that section of the drivers' license law which makes it mandatory for a court to revoke the license of a person convicted of driving while intoxicated.

This often works a hardship on truck drivers, chauffeurs, or others dependent for their livelihood on professional driving, the judge said. He favors giving the court discretionary power so that in such cases the revocation would apply only to pleasure vehicle driving.

Last month Judge Hermes suspended 179 licenses, fined 239 defendants a total of $1,349, and sent 87 defendants to the county jail or the Bridewell.

ENGLAND BOASTS LOSSES TO NAVY LESS THAN 4 PCT.

Tanker Is Sunk; German Liner Beached.

LONDON, Dec. 2 (AP).—An authoritative announcement asserted tonight that Britain's navy had "enabled 21,000,000 tons of British shipping to keep to the seas with a loss of less than 4 per cent of her total naval tonnage" in three months of war.

This declaration followed closely the disclosure of another loss to mines in waters around England, the sinking of the 8,010 ton British tanker San Calisto off the southeast coast. Two of her crew were killed, seven injured, and 35 landed unhurt.

Balanced against this was the capture of two German vessels, the 2,185 ton steamer Eilbek and the 215 ton trawler Sophie Busse, and the reported beaching of the 9,521 ton German liner Watussi by her own crew.

Oil Appears On Water.

The crew of an unnamed admiralty trawler reported the sinking of a German submarine and possibly a second off the east coast this week. After sinking the first U-boat, the crew said it attacked another with depth bombs and that oil patches indicated it had been successful.

The Watussi was run ashore south of Cape Point, Union of South Africa, by her German crew after being intercepted by South African bombers. Her 35 passengers and crew of 127 were rescued. This was the eighth German steamer beached or scuttled to avoid capture.

A Reuters [British News Agency] dispatch from Bergen said the 1,277 ton Norwegian steamer Arcturus had struck a mine off the eastern coast of Scotland yesterday and that nine of her crew of 17 were missing.

The British statement said that Germany had "put out of action thru sinking only about 53,000 tons of British warships and the most important units in the group were a quarter of a century old."

[Britain's chief losses were the 29,150 ton batleship Royal Oak and the 22,500 ton aircraft carrier Courageous.]

Extensive Building Program.

The statement said Britain had 1,500,000 tons of war craft of all types at the start of the war and added this "makes no allowance for completions from one of the most extensive building programs the world has ever seen."

Naval losses were described as "part of the price for removing from active participation in world trading of some 4,500,000 tons of German shipping and bottling up except for spasmodic raids and general piratical work of the whole of German naval forces."

Anthony Eden, dominions secretary in the war cabinet, warned in an address at Warwick against underrating Britain's war task. He asserted "Germany's whole economy has been twisted for war purposes. It is Britain's power, influence and authority that Germany is out to break."

Trawler Beached.

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, Dec. 2 [U. P.]. — A British trawler, fleeing from a U-boat, was beached today on the coast of Iceland, reports from Reykjavik said tonight.

German Ship Takes on Oil.

VERA CRUZ, Mexico, Dec. 2 (AP).—The German liner Columbus, in Mexican waters since the outbreak of the European war, was reported today taking on 20,000 barrels of oil from a Mexican tanker. Whether the 32,581 ton vessel was being fueled to sail, or whether the oil merely was for operation of its electrical and refrigeration plants, was not known.

Denies Own Death

JAN SIBELIUS.

HELSINGFORS, Dec. 2 [U. P.].—Jan Sibelius, famous Finnish composer, today denied rumors that he had been killed in a Russian air raid.

Sibelius, from his forest home in the suburb of Tusula, telephoned that he was well and uninjured. He sent the following message to the United States:

"I have two things uppermost in my mind and it won't take many words to express them. I am indeed proud of my people for what they are doing these days. And I am happy to witness again the wonderful way in which the great American nation has rallied to the support of Finland. That is all I can say at this moment."

RUSSIA CHARGES EFFORT BY PRESS TO SPREAD WAR

MOSCOW, Dec. 2 (AP).—The soviet government newspaper Izvestia asserted today that efforts were being made through the press of the United States, Britain, and France to draw the Balkan states and Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland into the war.

"Conditions in Belgium and Holland show what a tremendous rôle is played by the spreading of panic in the English, French, and American press with the purpose of attracting neutral countries into the war," Izvestia said. "They claim Belgium, Switzerland, and Holland are being menaced by the German invasion and as a result militaristic policies dominate these countries. Such is the policy of the marching allies of the present war."

Jugo-Slavia Prepares to Meet War if It Comes

BELGRADE, Jugo-Slavia, Dec. 2.—The government today took steps to prepare the country to cope with the eventuality of war. A decree was issued authorizing the setting up of organizations to issue food ration cards, to control exports and imports, and to take over the stocks of many raw materials now in private hands.

DEADLOCK FREES MORE OF OLDER FRENCH SOLDIERS

Decree Releases Fathers of 2 from Service.

PARIS, Dec. 2 (AP).—Thousands of French fathers will be released gradually from the army, beginning Dec. 15, in line with the Anglo-French strategy of fighting Germany with seapower and economics instead of mass land offensives.

Premier Edouard Daladier today announced a decree releasing, subject to recall at any time, all fathers of two or more children. They will be returned gradually to civilian life, where they will aid the country by working in war industries and taking care of their families.

The premier also announced that men 40 years old, or older, will be taken from the front lines and replaced by younger men now in service in the rear.

Second Demobilization Order.

The demobilization decree was the second of the war. On Oct. 28 the government ordered the release of all men 49 years old, those more than 43 with three children, and those of 45 or more with two children.

With development of fortress warfare and with most of the fighting being done at sea, the government, after releasing older men from active service, still will have an army of more than 4,000,000 men to meet any German offensive.

Observers pointed out millions of reserves were needed during the world war because of the heavy casualty lists in great battles.

Patrols Increase Activity.

Increased patrol activity at several points on the western front was reported today. Military sources said both sides made raids and the French captured several prisoners.

[Another dispatch reported patrol activity in the Vosges mountain area southwest of Saarbruecken. The French were said to have reoccupied an outpost in sharp fighting near Wissembourg and to have killed 12 Germans when they ambushed a patrol at another point.]

The French communique tonight said "a quiet day on the whole front."

CROWD IN ROME CHEERS FINNS, ASSAILS SOVIETS

ROME, Dec. 2 (AP).—Uniformed Fascists demonstrated against Russia today before the Russian embassy and the Finnish legation.

About 3,000 demonstrators, including many students, gathered before the soviet embassy, at which Nicolai Gorelchin assumed his duties as ambassador only a week ago, and shouted antisoviet slogans for half an hour. Then the throng marched to the Finnish legation. There it cheered the Finns, denounced the Russians, and carried Eero Jarnefelt, the Finnish minister, on its shoulders.

BRITISH CENSOR TRIES TO RESIGN; OFFER REFUSED

LONDON, Dec. 2 (AP).—Nearly all London morning newspapers said today that Sir Walter Monckton, director general of the press and censorship bureau of the information ministry, had offered his resignation but that it had not been accepted.

Sir Walter Monckton.

The authoritative Press association, however, said it was authorized to state that Sir Walter "has not resigned."

Sir Walter objected, the newspapers said, to his lack of authority. He was required to refer news to government departments for final censorship. He was appointed Oct. 3 after the press had criticized vigorously the censorship methods during the first month of the war with Germany.

THE LITERATURE OF CHRISTMAS

By CALEB

THE extent to which Christendom's natal day has remained a major theme in English letters would astonish the layman—even the well-read booklover. In fact, it has remained for a Chicagoan of our own day to perform a real service of enlightenment, in surveying and summarizing Yuletide's place in print since the first collection of carols appeared in 1521.

Walter W. Schmauch's own review, titled Christmas Literature Through the Centuries, runs to twenty-eight chapters and 418 pages; beginning with Christmas history and finishing with twentieth-century writers, anthologies, and omnibus compilations. Contrary to expectation, the chronicles of Christmas in English, French and German are not numerous—twenty-two volumes—the first hailing from London in 1734, and called Round About Our Coal Fire. Old broadsides and pamphlets on the subject number thirteen: books of carols and hymns, twenty-eight; while in verse and fiction some half-hundred writers, many of whose works are in our book section, have contributed conspicuously to the Christmas leavening of literature.

Earliest of these latter was a Thomas Tusser, whose rhymes saw the light in 1557; while names more familiar to the informed follow chronologically: Milton, Scott, Irving, Dickens, Thackeray—as well as celebrants of Christmas themes from our own literary roster like Philips Brooks, Kate Douglas Wiggin, James Lane Allen, Henry Van Dyke, Thomas Nelson Page, and others. Among Christmas writer-lovers, Dickens stands preeminent, with five books and eighteen short stories; Irving's Sketch Book is robustly redolent of Yule in Old England; and perennial popular favorites from past days have been such single stories as Wiggin's The Bird's Christmas Carol, Van Dyke's The Other Wise Man, Allen's The Doctor's Christmas Eve, F. Hopkinson Smith's Colonel Carter's Christmas . . . with Dickens' own Christmas Carol remaining the classic whose human interest and timeless appeal will perhaps outlast all others.

That Christmas should have been, and continues to be, a preoccupation of writers is logical in the day's very significance to civilization. For each new generation annually emerging on life's scene, literature attuned to it will be the vehicle of cheer, hope, beauty and high emotions; for, as Hamilton Wright Mabie epitomized such pages devoted to a single sublime concept: The Book of Christmas is a book of joy in the sadness of the world, a book of play in the work of the world, a book of consolation in the sorrow of the world. And so, say we all, will it be forever!

A SOLDIER'S LIFE OFFERS SECURITY AND OPPORTUNITY

Food Good, Hours Short, and Pay Steady.

rooms for a "session." His 50 charges lounged about him on the double decked army cots.

Opportunities for All.

"You can make your place in the army just what you want it to be," he told them. "There's no one to hold you back; all you need is the willingness to learn. Some of you will want to study mechanics, electrical work, photography, radio, or clerical work. These men will be sent to the coast artillery school at Fort Monroe, Va., for training.

"Others will learn trades right here in Fort Sheridan," Sergt. Schlager said. "Here at the post we have the army cooking and baking school, where professional chefs and bakers teach their trades. Other posts specialize in other occupational courses.

"Your pay now is only $21 a month and keep, but you can go as high as $157.50 a month and keep as a noncommissioned officer.

"Don't forget, there's no depression in the army. Present rates of pay were fixed in 1922, and depressions and recessions haven't changed them. You all are enlisted for three years. Don't look upon that time as if it were a jail sentence. Just remember that for three years—or as long after that as you like—your worries are over. It's up to Uncle Sam to feed, clothe, and shelter you; furnish the best of medical attention when you are ill, and give you the opportunity to see the world."

He's Seen His Share.

Sergt. Schlager has seen his share. He enlisted at St. Louis, Mo., in 1921 when he was 19 years old. The next three years he spent at Fort Bragg, N. C.; then came two years in the Philippines. He spent 1927 with an artillery unit on the Pacific coast, then crossed the country to Fort Wright, N. Y., where he served another three years. He's thinking of having a try at Panama next, or maybe Alaska.

One of the recruits at the session was Elmer Jacobsen, 19 years old, a graduate of Lane Technical High school in Chicago. Jacobsen left school last February and spent seven months trying vainly to find a decent job. He joined the 61st on Sept. 21.

"You can bet your boots that I'm going to be one of those lads going to Fort Monroe," he declared. "Electrical work has been my hobby for years and I'm going to learn more about it.

"But I don't think I'll leave the army when my three year hitch is up," Jacobsen said. "I'd like to make it my career, go places right in the service. Considering the fact that all my other expenses are paid the pay isn't bad, and after thirty years I can retire with a pension. Where in these times could I get as good a job in private life?"

Another Youth's Story.

Edwin Molenda's story is much the same. Molenda, 21, is the son of a Milwaukee WPA worker. He had a job, but it blew up a year ago. He first tried the CCC camps, then joined the 61st on Sept. 30. Molenda wants to spend several years learning to be a machinist, then carry that trade back with him to private life. But at present the army is all right with him.

"I thought it would be tough, but the army's not like that," he said. "Drill and maneuver periods are short and we have plenty of time left to ourselves. In addition to the Sunday holiday we have half holidays on Wednesday and Saturday as well, and of course every evening free. I worked lot longer hours than that when I had an outside job."

Plan Maneuvers for Jan. 8.

Molenda and Jacobsen are typical of the 900 recruits in the regiment. Many enlisted for careers in the army; others to learn trades and businesses which will make secure their future in private life.

On Jan. 8 the 61st coast artillery will leave Fort Sheridan for a month's maneuvers in southern Illinois. Under the command of Lieut. Col. J. L. Homer the artillerymen will engage in sweeping defense tactics. By spring the green recruits of the 61st will be veterans, ready for the longer maneuvers which may take them to any part of the United States or its possessions during the coming years.

Divorce Suit Dropped

Edward E. Kleinschmidt, 63 years old, wealthy Highland Park inventor, has dropped divorce action against his wife, Marie, 29. This became known yesterday when he announced a reconciliation. He could not be reached for a comment last night.

Kleinschmidt, one of the inventors of the teletype machine, sued his wife for divorce in Waukegan last July 19. He charged cruelty, specifically alleging that she threw a vase at him, tried to attack him with a metal ash stand, and used abusive language.

Months passed, and the divorce suit never was called for trial. Recently, Kleinschmidt had it dismissed, according to his announcement yesterday. The Kleinschmidts were married Sept. 25, 1937. Marriage records listed her name as Mary Jeanette Kawczynski. Kleinschmidt and his wife are expected to make their home in Florida soon. They now have a $200,000 home at 2620 Deere Park drive, North, Highland Park.

BERLIN, Dec. 2 [U. P.].—DNB, official news agency, reported today from Bratislava, Slovakia, that several persons had been arrested for spreading rumors to alarm the population. The British intelligence service allegedly inspired the rumors.

NEUTRAL HOPES OF LETUP IN SEA BLOCKADE FADE

Dutch, Belgians Still Not Officially Notified.

BY LARRY RUE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Dec. 2.—Belgium and the Netherlands late today had not as yet received official notice of the two way blockade against Germany which Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain of Great Britain announced would be instituted Monday.

Only the faintest hope was expressed here and at The Hague that this might be the time when the British would make concessions in view of the protests of most of the important neutrals except the United States.

The British so far have failed even to answer the protests, which charged that the blockade against German exports was a violation of international law and in some cases treaties.

Shy at Debate.

Observers interpreted this as possibly due to unwillingness to open international debate on the subject.

Authorities of the low countries refused to predict the ultimate effect of the blockade on their own economies. They admitted, however, that it would be a serious blow.

The Netherlands protested twice and Belgium once. It is understood that both countries are trying to work out a common action to be applied when the blockade is put into effect.

Mention German Threats.

The renewed veiled threats of the German press and radio that Germany's attitude toward the small neutrals depended on their ability to defend their own neutrality rights were mentioned here, altho the Belgian and Dutch foreign offices insisted they were not disturbed.

Warning to Neutrals.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Dec. 2.—Threats against neutral nations which either sell or charter ships to England were heard today in circles considered close to Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering. Neutral vessels which might be of service to England should be seized by the Germans "the same as England would seize automobiles destined for Germany if the automobiles were aboard neutral ships," these persons said.

Neutrals were warned they must "realize that Germany will meet every attempt of England to facilitate shipping to its ports with the strongest countermeasures."

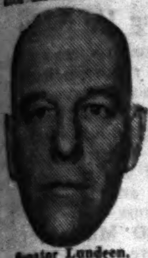
OPEN CAMPAIGN TO MAKE EUROPE GIVE UP ISLANDS

Form Committee to Demand War Debt Payment.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—Senator Ernest Lundeen [Farmer-Labor, Minn.] today announced the formation of a committee which will campaign for the cession of European possessions in the western hemisphere to the United States in payment of the war debts.



Senator Lundeen.

With headquarters in Washington, the "Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee" will conduct a series of meetings in principal cities of the United States, Senator Lundeen announced, to organize sentiment for a demand from the American government for cash liquidation of the war debts or cession of island possessions in the Caribbean sea and off the coasts of the two American continents as payment on account.

Hundreds of Possessions.

Great Britain could turn over Bermuda, Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados, and hundreds of islands and islets in the Bahamas to square up its debt, incurred over two decades ago, Senator Lundeen declared. France and other European countries own various islands in or near the Caribbean sea or a short distance from the coasts of the two American continents.

Europe still owes the United States approximately 14 billion dollars, the senator noted. He said:

"Great Britain owes in round figures $5,500,000,000; France, $4,180,000,000; Germany, $1,260,000,000; Belgium, $453,000,000; Czecho-Slovakia [now possessed by Germany], $166,000,000; Austria [also now a part of Germany], $26,000,000; Poland [now possessed by Germany and Russia], $263,000,000; Italy, $2,000,000,000; Russia, $385,000,000; Hungary, $2,400,000; Greece, $34,000,000, and Finland, $8,230,000.

Finland's Promptness Cited.

"The only country in Europe to meet its obligations to the United States promptly is Finland, whose wartime debt was discounted 50 per cent by the American government. Hungary has been paying $18,000 annually, and Greece turned over $13,000 to the United States treasury on its obligation of $34,000,000."

Senator Lundeen proposed at the last session of congress that the West Indies be seized and applied as payment on account of the war debts. The proposal was favorably received by the American people, he said, as evidenced by a national poll which showed 66 per cent in favor of it.

The senator said that among desirable objectives which would be attained by his proposals would be a closer bond of friendship between the nations of North, Central, and South America. This, he said, would surely follow an elimination of foreign control of islands off the coasts of the two continents. He declared that all this would help insulate the Americas against participation in Europe's recurring wars.

Seizure of Deposits.

Foreign governments owning no territory in the western hemisphere or unwilling to cede their possessions to the United States in adjusting overdue wartime debts could cut down their indebtedness by surrender of bank deposits in this country, the senator said. Many of these countries have large sums on deposit in refineries and 700 tank cars.

A movement for a moratorium on Finnish war debt payments was initiated by Senators William E. Borah [R., Idaho] and George W. Norris [Radical, Neb.]. Such action would require congressional approval at the next session and presumably would call for a refund of the Dec. 15 payment, which Finland has promised to make. The payments would be suspended under the plan until Finland recovers her normal standing.

900 REFUGEES FROM EUROPE LANDED IN N. Y.

New York, Dec. 2 [Special].—Nine hundred Jewish refugees from Germany and Austria arrived at Hoboken today on the Holland-American liner Rotterdam, the advance guard of a migration that will total 3,700 by Wednesday.

Huddled on the pier with their meager belongings, waiting for agents of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid society, they were a tragic sight. Many of the older men and women were patently undernourished and near exhaustion after months of waiting for entry into this country.

Two of the refugees died on the voyage. They were Rudolf Freund, 59 years old, of Vienna, and Mrs. Paula Gumpertz, 58. Her husband, Leopold Gumpertz, said he had left a fortune of $200,000 in his haste to leave Wuppertal in the Rhineland.

The Rotterdam had been transformed for the voyage into a third class ship to give the 1,116 passengers accommodations at the lowest rate possible.

Dolly Jahn of Saylorsburg, Pa., a singer, returned after a stay of 18 months in Germany.

Capt. Theodore Stuut of the Rotterdam said that on the nine hour trip from Rotterdam to the British control station off the Downs he saw four floating mines.

Germans Obtain Control of Rumania Oil Concern

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Dec. 2.—German capital has obtained a footing in the Rumanian oil industry, it was made known today, having gained control of the Petrol Block society of Bucharest. The society has confined its activities to refining and transportation, but it is expected to start producing from fields which it is understood it plans to buy from the Rumanian government. It owns three banks in the United States.

SHOOTS AT HAT, HITS FARMER.

DUCE INSPECTS EXCAVATIONS FOR SUBWAY IN ROME

ROME, Dec. 2.—Premier Mussolini today inspected the excavations for the Rome subway which will run from the Coliseum six miles out to the site of the Universal exposition of 1942. As is customary when Mussolini visits such works, all laborers will receive double pay for today's work. It will be a double track subway with trains running every 3 minutes, to make the whole trip in 13 minutes, including stops at five stations.

C.I.O. BUS DRIVERS STRIKE IN FLINT; RESIDENTS WALK

Flint, Mich., Dec. 2 [Special].—Officials today sought to relieve the public transportation tieup imposed on this industrial city of 165,000 persons by a strike of C. I. O. bus drivers.

The strikers are members of the Transport Workers' union, a C. I. O. affiliate. About 100 of them, employés of the Trolley Coach company, which provides Flint's only public transportation, refused to take buses out this morning. They are demanding a pay increase of 10 cents an hour.

City councilmen met with officers of the Trolley Coach company and members of a specially appointed state mediation committee in an effort to arrange some means of transportation. A mediation committee member later conferred with leaders of the union.

With the Christmas season approaching and Saturday a heavy shopping day, crowds flocked into the city's business district on foot, in taxicabs, and in private cars.

The transportation tieup is the third similar walkout here in recent years. In 1936 and again in 1938 bus drivers struck.

TELEPHONE OPERATOR DIES.

Mount Carroll, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—Mrs. Daisy E. McEwen, 62 years old, night operator at the Northwestern Illinois Utilities Telephone exchange here for 15 years, died at her home last night. Funeral services will be held tomorrow.

$660,000 SOUGHT BY REPUBLICANS TO ERASE DEFICIT

660 Asked to Contribute $1,000 Each to Party.

BY PARKE BROWN.

An effort to wipe out the $660,000 deficit of the Republican national committee within the next four weeks was disclosed in Chicago yesterday by the solicitation of contributions of $1,000 each.

Donations of that amount are being sought from 660 individuals willing to help the party organization into the 1940 campaign substantially free of debt. Solicitation has been in progress less than two weeks and it is reported that approximately $100,000 has been subscribed.

The attempt is being sponsored by six men whose very names are expected to help in the task. Three of the men are from the east and three from the middle west. They are former Senator George Wharton Pepper of Philadelphia, Jeremiah Milbank of New York, E. T. Weir of Pittsburgh, Edgar M. Queeny of St. Louis, and Silas H. Strawn and Sewell L. Avery of Chicago.

Special Group Drafts Plan.

National Chairman John D. Hamilton announced that the plan, first discussed last October at a meeting of the finance committee of the eastern division of the organization, has been put into motion following the report of a special committee appointed at that time.

The committee consisted of two members of the national committee, S. F. Pryor Jr. of Connecticut and Harold W. Mason of Vermont, and Charles J. Graham, vice chairman of the Republican finance committee of Pennsylvania.

"It is unnecessary to point out the necessity of success in this undertaking," Hamilton said in announcing the adoption of the plan to members of his committee and other leaders.

Truce Talk Called Propaganda.

"Primarily its objective is the payment of the party's just obligations, but there are other factors of substantial importance. We are in a period where there is much talk of a political truce. Many of our own party members have been impressed by what is obviously propaganda.

"What more conclusive answer could there be to the question whether our party intends to go forward as a virile and active agency of government than the payment of our debt at this particular time?"

A complete outline of the plan appeared in the heading of the printed subscription blank which possible donors were asked to sign. This read:

"To enable the Republican party to go into 1940 debt-free, I will join with the others whose names are signed to this and similar statements by contributing $1,000, payable before Dec. 31, 1939, on the call of the national treasurer, to be applied exclusively to the retirement of the deficit of the Republican national committee, none of which has been incurred since 1936.

Pledges Depend on $400,000.

"I make this contribution because the elimination of the balance of the 1936 debt will inspire confidence, support our two party system of government, and especially because it will greatly enhance the election of a Republican President and congress, which I believe to be exceedingly important to the welfare of the country.

"It is understood I shall not be asked to fulfill this commitment unless and until notified by the national treasurer that $400,000 has been subscribed for this specific purpose."

GLENN APPOINTS GEORGE A. BARR CAMPAIGN CHIEF

Otis F. Glenn, candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator, announced yesterday that George A. Barr of Joliet will be his campaign manager.

"I accept this responsibility," said Barr, "because I am tremendously interested in the success of the Republican party nationally as well as in Illinois. I am sure that former Senator Glenn's nomination will add greatly to the Republican party's opportunity for victory next November."

Barr, a former trustee of the University of Illinois, is a brother of State Senator Richard J. Barr, dean of the upper house in Springfield. In addition to being twice elected university trustee he has held the offices of state's attorney of Will county and director of the state department of trade and commerce. For twelve years he was chairman of the Will county Republican central committee.

10 MIDGET RADIO SETS STOLEN.

THE CITY THROBS WITH CHRISTMAS SHOPPING SPIRIT

The Crowds, the Lights, Sounds Are There.

The loop and neighborhood shopping centers vibrated yesterday with the spirit of Christmas.

Dense crowds filled the sidewalks, the streets, the stores. On State street red and green lights from the wreaths on alternate lamp posts cut gay swaths thru the gray atmosphere.

Volunteers of America Santa Clauses, their voices booming as merrily as ever, guarded their red brick chimneys at each corner and patted the heads of awestruck children. Salvation Army lassies, scarlet capes swirling in the wind, rang brass bells beside black kettles. Here and there the strains of an occasional carol was wafted out, never strident nor brassy, but a soft undertone. There was even snow—a few desultory flakes drifting down—to make the merchants completely happy.

Darning Cotton Is Out.

If you weren't doing your Christmas shopping, you were completely out of the picture. Darning cotton, the salesgirl seemed to observe as she gingerly wrapped up so mundane a purchase, just isn't bought now. But it comes, nevertheless, in a Christmas box sprigged with holly leaves, red candles or little angels floating about.

A good 50 per cent of the shoppers were children, lost in the wondrous fairyland of their dreams. They packed the toy departments, their eyes aflame with happiness and desire. They pasted their noses against the great Christmas windows to watch Santa in his workshop, Santa with his circus [the seats of his Ferris wheel were stockings, with a doll peeping out of each], Santa with his beautifully strange little animal friends.

They fondled the beautiful baby doll whose eyes close only when it is rocked. They peered through the wire fence which keeps their hands off the electric trains.

The Army Is Lined Up.

They made neat, strategic arrangements of the toy soldiers, which, contrary to earlier belief, are being shown in great numbers. They gently pressed the keys of the toy baby grand piano which has black keys that really work.

Of course, they talked to Santa and to his helpmates, those rollicking, naughty clowns who held sway in various stores. One Santa, the most wonderful of all, seemed to be just a little toy, about 2 feet high, standing in deep snow on a table. But, if you talked to him, in a firm, loud voice, he would answer.

Ask him anything, and he would endeavor to answer. Such as [from a frightened, brown eyed little girl], "Where are the toys?" Back he would boom, "Second floor, dear, and you'll find my big brother up there!" Or, "Who are you?" And his, "Ho! Ho! Ho! Don't you know?"

THE FABLE OF WORMLEY VEEPINGS

ONCE UPON A TIME a man named Wormley Veepings lived in a town with a name that is even funnier than Wormley Veepings. Wormley was an upstanding citizen and a dutiful husband and father. But he had one failing. He kept putting things off until the last minute.

NOW one of the things he kept putting off was a visit to his rich old uncle, Billingsley Veepings, who lived in the same town and was conveniently accessible by street car, bus, suburban train or "L." Wormley kept planning to visit his Uncle Billingsley, but something always came up.

FINALLY, when he heard that his Uncle Billingsley was very sick, Wormley remembered that he was his uncle's sole heir and decided to visit him that very day. It was raining outside and Wormley couldn't find his rubbers. It took an hour to find the rubbers, and then Wormley set out. When he arrived at his uncle's house, he found the old gentleman sitting in bed with his watch in one hand and his pen in the other.

"I WAITED for you for many years," said Uncle Billingsley in a weak voice, "and this morning I decided that if you did not visit me by eleven o'clock I would exclude you from my will. It is now five minutes past eleven. I have just bequeathed my entire fortune to the Home for Motherless Mice."

"THAT HE HAS," said his lawyer, who was sitting by the bed. And old Uncle Billingsley expired.

WORMLEY VEEPINGS sat down on the bed and wept.

(Don't put off your Christmas shopping until the last minute. Our staff of 3,000 is better able to help you make wise and careful selections now. Remember the fate of Wormley Veepings.)

GOOD FELLOWS STREAM IN TO AID UNFORTUNATES

Their One Task: To Make a Christmas Merry.

BY PHILIP MAXWELL.

One week ago today the 1939 Good Fellow campaign, sponsored by THE TRIBUNE, was started. Volunteer Good Fellows have been more numerous than usual at this early period, and hopes have been aroused that 4,000 to 5,000 more children will be aided this year than last.

The Good Fellow button.

The Good Fellows have but one function—to make Christmas a happy day for families too poor to buy anything but the necessities of life. To such families the Good Fellows deliver baskets, usually containing the material for a bountiful meal and toys and garments to delight the tots.

Individuality Is Stressed.

Individuality is stressed. THE TRIBUNE, this year, has no plans to distribute baskets. It wants the Good Fellows to be their own bearers of happiness and to achieve for themselves that warm glow that accompanies the knowledge of a charitable deed cheerfully done.

This year's Good Fellows are classified in three groups. First, those who prefer to make up their own baskets and deliver them. To each of these THE TRIBUNE furnishes the name and address of a family, whose need has been vouched for by charity organizations.

In the second group are the general Good Fellows; all that one must do to qualify is to send $1 or more to the Good Fellow fund. The third is composed of Good Fellow clubs. Each club puts into the fund the equivalent of $1 [or more] per member, and promises to make deliveries to specified families.

Basket Arrangements Made.

THE TRIBUNE has arranged to purchase baskets for the second and third groups. Since thousands are to be distributed, wholesale rates can be obtained and there will be more good things for the families than if purchases were made one by one.

Under the system outlined, these baskets will be turned over to the club groups for delivery. Among the club groups which have come in already with large donations are the Affiliated Garages of Chicago and the Cleaning and Dyeing Plant Owners association.

Recognition will be given the Good Fellows in a new way this Christmas. Each contributor of $1 or more will be presented with the Good Fellow button. This is a departure from tradition, and was made in the belief that the wearers would encourage others to become Good Fellows. The buttons will be mailed to those who post their checks, or they may be had at the Good Fellow bureau by those who hand their contributions over the counter.

Checks should be made out to the Chicago Tribune Charities, Good Fellow fund. In the Metropolitan section of this paper is a coupon for Good Fellows to fill out.

CURTISS PLANTS SPEED BUILDING OF WAR PLANES

450 Army Pursuit Ships Will Be Turned Out.

BY WAYNE THOMIS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 2.—In the long low buildings of the Curtiss Aeroplane division of the Curtiss-Wright corporation here engineers are tooling up for the largest peacetime order for airplanes ever placed by the army air corps. The Curtiss company is about to begin turning out in "rapid production" approximately 450 new P-40 single seat pursuit airplanes.

Guards, armed with automatic pistols, are alert at every gate. A high fence, topped with barbed wire, cuts off the plant from the rest of Buffalo. The factory is in the midst of the city, far from the airport, and is unique in that it is one of the few in the country so situated. And for months it has been closed to all outsiders.

Recalls European Factories.

But today this reporter made an inspection tour thru parts of the engineering and manufacturing buildings to see how modern American fighting planes are constructed. The visit recalled to mind the French and British aircraft factories inspected last June and July, only a few weeks before the European war was declared.

In the perfectly lighted, airy buildings here was the same haste, the same wartime pressure. But there the resemblance ceased. The French and British factories were achieving their rapid production of planes chiefly by brute man power—by employment of vast throngs of workmen who built by hand, using nibblers and file to make fits.

Work at High Speed.

Here automatic reaming machines, huge hydraulic presses, and thousands of jigs and templates enabled workmen to finish up parts at high speed. Some parts are made a dozen at a time with absolute interchangeability. This interchangeability is the real test of production methods.

Inevitably in making such a tour some idea of the size and scope of the plant, and an indication of its capacity is obtained. Company officials, however, remained mute when questions about rates of production were asked, or countered them by saying: "You're the first news gatherer to get inside here for months. Use your eyes, but don't expect such questions answered."

Some Built for French.

They were not answered but it was apparent that this factory is geared for rapid building of the complicated instruments that fighting airplanes have become. It is known that the company, in the months from May, 1938, until September, 1939, built nearly 400 Hawk 75 and P-36 fighters [virtually identical types] for the air corps and the French government.

The P-36 is a fighter basically similar to the P-40. The P-36 had a 1,200 horse power radial motor. The P-40 will be equipped with the 1,250 horse power Allison V-12 liquid cooled motor and will be the first single seat fighter with such an engine built for the army in nearly 10 years. Problems of construction encountered in the P-36s and P-40s will be similar.

While company officials refuse to discuss this point it is known that they hope also to sell between 400 and 600 of the P-40s to France. In New York banking circles there are reports that such a sale already has been made, subject to the ultimate approval of the air corps committee that has the authority to hold or release new American fighting planes for export.

French Praise Planes.

"Our representatives in France," said Burdette S. Wright, vice president in charge of the Buffalo plants, "report that the 75s have performed wonderfully well against the Nazi competition. We're told that the German Messerschmitt planes cannot maneuver with the 75s, altho they are a little faster.

"The 75 is a high altitude fighter but the Germans are fighting their Messerschmitt's at low altitudes. Nevertheless our planes are able to turn inside the Nazi ships and have given an excellent account of themselves. Some stories have indicated that none of the 75s have been downed, but we are told that there have been a number of losses.

"It would be interesting to know what the P-40s could do in France," he smiled, ending the conversation.

The company executive and engineering offices are in a two story brick structure connected with inclosed runways and a long stairway to the main factory. Entering by the stairway with William Crosswell, sales manager, and A. D. Palmer, public relations manager, the production planning was immediately apparent.

The main plant is nearly 300 yards in length. The entering end has the receiving rooms where rivets, tools, the thousands of sheets of metallic blue duralumin "24ST" alclad metal that form the skin of wings and fuselage, and the billets of forged steel for landing gear and gun fittings, are stored. Here, too, are the automatic reamers and screw machines that shape many of these parts.

The forged billets of steel—one shaped to form the outside of the hydraulic shock strut and another to form the piston in that strut—are carted to the reamers. One skilled mechanic operates from two to four of these machines. These experts supervise the cutting of 75 pounds of steel from the 90 pound billet to the completed outside strut.

Further up the line the hydraulic presses are forming tops and bottoms of huge fuel tanks. The sides of these tanks are welded into place further up the line. To the right and left of the main line are shop divisions where extruded sections of aluminum are riveted together in jigs to form the rudder, fin, and elevators of the tail surfaces.

Use Multicellular Wing.

After the basic structure is taken off the jigs the metal skin of the fin and horizontal stabilizers is riveted in place. The fabric for the rudder and elevators proper is applied later.

Just beyond the hydraulic presses the wing assembly begins. The Curtiss fighters are really "flying wings." That means that the landing gear is attached directly to the wing, and the engine mounts also are attached to the main wing spars. The fuselage merely fits over the wing and is anchored with rivets and fairings.

Curtiss for years has been using the multicellular wing. This is made up in two halves. The halves are fitted together and riveted until they become one inseparable whole. The upper skin of the wing forms the floor of the pilot's cockpit. These halves are made up on jigs, the skin riveted on and then they are joined.

Meantime, as the completed pieces move along the production line there are various subassembly points. The wings are fitted with the landing gear. The tail unit is put together. Then the tail is added and the rounded tip pieces that form the last foot or so of span on the wings.

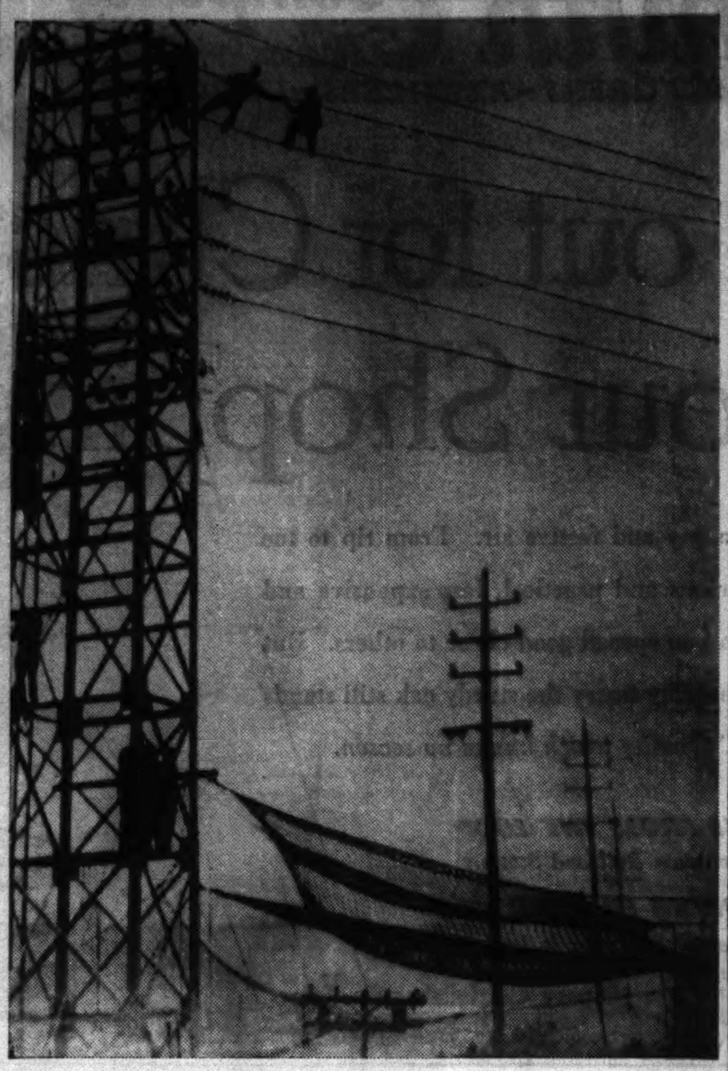
The engine control fittings and drillings, the hydraulic flap and landing gear pumps, the throttles, instrument boards, plexiglass cowlings, the seat, the cockpit fittings, the tanks and all the thousands of units in the machine are put into place at the factory. Then, when each piece has reached a certain point in the line they are crated and placed on trucks.

They are carried out to the main assembly room in the big Curtiss hangar at Buffalo Municipal airport. There the wings and fuselage come together for the first time. The motors are fitted, controls are hooked up, instruments are added to the panels, batteries, radio, guns, bomb racks, etc., are added.

So perfect are the company's production methods that the staff never knows what wings will meet what fuselage, or what engine will be fitted on what engine mount. Their confidence is based upon their methods that make every part of the plane interchangeable with every similar part on every similar machine they deliver.

Late at night I was allowed to visit the final assembly hangar at the airport and examine a P-40 that was having its Allison engine installed. The ship is virtually identical in dimensions with the P-36—span and length being similar. I was told that the 36s and the 40s are identical back of the fire wall between the engine and pilot.

Rescues Youth from Wire, 65 Feet Up



[Acme Telephoto.]

Policeman John Albert grasping Howard Meier, 19, after the youth had climbed power line tower at Laurelton, Long Island, N. Y., and, after the current had been turned off, ventured out upon wires. Nets were spread at the base of the tower.

Loses His Nerve

New York, Dec. 2 U. P.].—8 a. m.—Howard Meier, 19 years old, climbs atop a 65 foot tower carrying high tension wires of the Long Island railroad.

10:57 a. m.—The railroad shuts off its power, discontinuing service, fearing an electrocution.

Noon—The crowd below is augmented by 34 police emergency squads and one hook and ladder company.

12:30 p. m.—Nets spread at base of tower; six patrolmen begin climbing it; Meier moves out and straddles wires, threatening to jump.

1:40 p. m.—Railroad restores power, resumes service.

"I was sick of living," Meier told police. "I wanted to jump, but when I got up there I lost my nerve."

50,000 THRONG TO STOCK SHOW ON OPENING DAY

Women and Youth Take the Spotlight.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

The International Live Stock exposition, with its concurrent hay and grain show, horse show, and 4-H club congress, had the biggest opening day in its 40 years of history yesterday.

It was youth's day at the show, where 13,385 head of blue ribbon cattle, horses, sheep, and swine, valued at $5,000,000, are on exhibition. There is $100,000 in prize money to be distributed and, judging from the first day's throng of nearly 50,000 persons, the goal of half a million attendance will be reached by the closing day of the show, Dec. 9.

46 Experts Judge Entries.

The balconies over the brightly lighted tanbark ring were well filled by noon as thousands of farmers, their wives, sons, and daughters came to watch the cattle from their pastures pass before the judges who will award the coveted blue ribbons. There are 46 experts here to decide the fine points in each animal, how it walks, and how it has been finished, and the amount of meat it will produce.

The nonexpert audience, the city folk, came later and enjoyed the scene, the bellowing and bewildered actions of the fat cattle as they were led around the ring by the nose, sometimes by a pretty girl who guided them with a stick or a small boy who twisted the animals' tails; the fat swine that were intent on looking for a meal in the sawdust, grunting and wiggling their tails; the sheep that stood so still with their heads in their masters' laps; the proud horses that pranced and shook their glossy manes in wonder at the human race.

Women Seek Stock Awards.

Youth and the presence of many women in the contestants' rings were noticeable yesterday. And the cattle sent into the ring by the boys and girls showed a better quality and a finer finish than ever before.

"All this means," said Henry W. Marshall of Lafayette, Ind., president of the exposition, "that young people are finding greater rewards in remaining on the farm. It means a more intelligent citizenship. It means that when the government gets thru paying out bonus checks to incompetent farmers there will be a class of young farmers ready to step in and make a success of the industry. It means that we are building a safeguard for the future of America."

Hits Theory of Scarcity.

Marshall, who owns 3,300 acres of farm land and feeds 650 cattle, says that his farms are paying and that he has never taken government checks for producing less crops.

"The theory of scarcity is wrong," he said. "We should adopt the theory of abundance and raise all we can.

"The future of this country is bound up in the farm. The way is being pointed here and it is further shown in the constant new uses that are being made of farm products—alcohol from corn stalks, plastics from soy beans. It is interesting to know that soy beans, the one crop that the government has not sought to control, are steadily rising in price. With greater intelligence on the farm and the greater use of surplus crops in industry, our future is bright."

Judging Gets Under Way.

Judging in the various divisional competitions got well under way yesterday. The grand championship award in the carlot fat cattle class went to Schmidt Brothers of Delmar, Ia., or a medium weight load of Angus steers. Schmidt Brothers also took first place in both the light and heavyweight Angus classes. [Light weight steers in the carlot classes average less than 1,050 pounds; medium weights, 1,050 to 1,150, and heavyweights, more than 1,150. Fifteen animals are shown as a carlot.]

Karl Hoffman of Ida Grove, Ia., won the Hereford carlot championship with a load of light steers. The Shorthorn championship went to James Blair of Dayton, Ia., on a heavyweight load.

Milking Shorthorns Chosen.

The only other fat cattle judged yesterday in the open classes were milking Shorthorns. First place went to D. Z. Gibson & Son of Caledonia, Ont. Thomas D. Phillips Jr., Columbus, O., won second place and Bruington Brothers of Pendleton, Ind., third.

W. J. and C. J. Brodie of Stouffville, Ont., showed the grand championship carload of fat lambs for the sixth consecutive year. They won with a load of Southdowns. The reserve championship went to the Michigan Pure Bred Sheep Breeders' association of East Lansing, Mich.

In the hay and grain division, Hugh Jeffrey of Whitby, Ont., won the soy bean championship with a sample of Mandarin variety. The reserve championship went to Hirsch brothers of Oreana, Ill., on a sample of Illini.

Canada Wins Place Honors.

John Hamilton of Coaldale, Alta., took the grand champion prize for Chancellor peas, and Albert C. Gohn of Emo, Ont., won the grand prize for red kidney beans. J. Decker Pemberton of British Columbia was the reserve champion in field peas.

M. F. Hepburn, premier of Ontario, and Mrs. Hepburn were show visitors. They entered seven Clydesdale horses from their farms.

Much interest was manifested by city visitors in the entries of Chicago business men who have farms near the city.

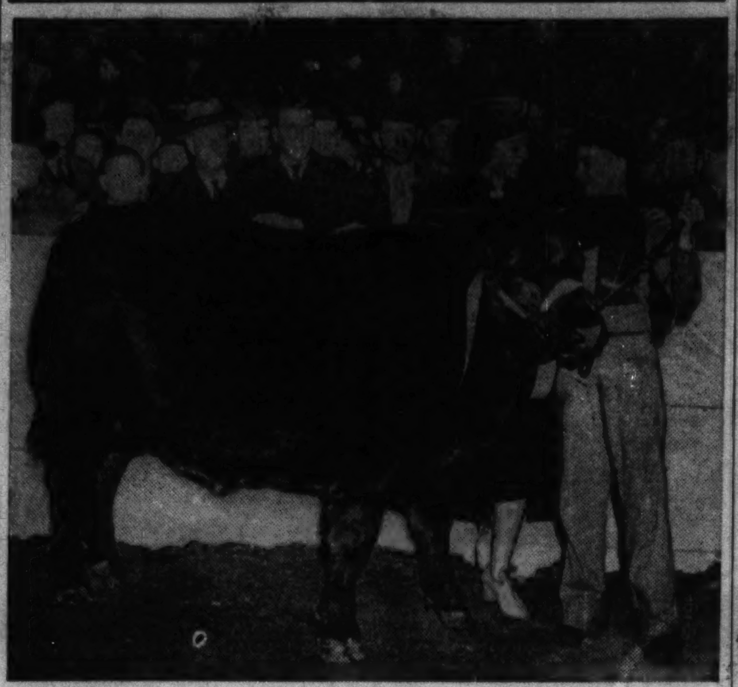
William Bartholomay Jr. has listed Shorthorn cattle, Percheron horses, and Shropshire, Oxford, Southdown, and Suffolk sheep from his Marellbar farm at Libertyville. Thomas E. Wilson, packer, is showing Shorthorn cattle from his Edellyn farms at Wilson. Belgian horses are listed by E. A. Cudahy Jr., from his Sugar Grove farm at Aurora, and another exhibitor from near Aurora is the Hawthorn farms, owned by John F. Cuneo and showing Suffolk horses.

Seeks Angus Honors.

J. D. Allen hopes to carry off the championships in the Aberdeen-Angus classes with entries from Allendale farm at Libertyville. Percy Meredith of Maple Park is represented in the Hereford cattle classes. Edward R. Johnston, who maintains the Holiday farm at Rectortown, Va., is showing Suffolk horses.

The opening program at the horse show was dedicated to "Chicago day" by special proclamation of Mayor Kelly. Only exhibitors in the Chicago area were eligible for the classes. Leading stables of the United States and Canada are represented at the show by more than 500 light horses.

Illinois Boy's Steer Grand Champion



Mrs. Farr Carroll of Aledo, Ill., stands proudly beside her son, Robert, 12, as he displays his steer, Mascott, chosen grand champion in the junior feeding contest at the International Live Stock exposition.

Hal B. Clark, 17, of Clarks Hill, Ind., with his pen of lambs that won the blue ribbon in junior feeding contest.

Faith Elaine Rhodes, 12, of Mendota, Ill., with her steer, adjudged best of his weight class.

Aledo, Ill., Boy's 'Mascott,' a Gentle Sort but No Ferdinand, Wins Steer Championship

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

He's gentle and sensitive. But his name isn't Ferdinand. And he's not a sissy. Mascott's the name.

These are the points Bob Carroll wants emphasized about his pet, the jet black berdeen Angus that was proclaimed grand champion junior steer yesterday at the International Live Stock exposition. Mascott won at the end of a day which saw a parade of the finest animals ever to be directed thru the International's arena in a junior feeding contest by the boys and girls of the 4-H clubs.

Second Aledo Triumph.

Bob, who hails from Aledo, Mercer county, is 12 years old, and Mascott is the first calf he ever raised. The Mercer county contingent was jubilant, for this is the second consecutive championship to be taken by an Aledo youngster. Last year the Angus exhibited by Irene Brown, a neighbor of the Carrolls, took not only junior honors but the grand championship of the entire show.

Great Day for 4-H Clubs.

It was a great day for the 4-H clubbers. Every lamb, hog, and calf was in the pink of condition for the feeding competitions—and so were the ruddy owners.

First to enter the judging rings were the lambs. The blue ribbon went to fat and fluffy triplets of Southdown-Cheviot cross breed shown by Hal Clark, 17, Clarks Hill, Ind. Hal is a veteran exhibitor at the International. This is the third year he has taken awards in the world's greatest animal show.

Second place for sheep went to the Southdowns shown by Wayne Brethorst of Seymour, Champaign county, and there should be plenty of fun on the Brethorst acres when he takes his prize money home! This is the ticklish situation: The farm breeds Hampshires and Shropshires; the Southdowns were just an experiment, and have not been so popular with the Brethorsts. Their owner is 20 and has been in 4-H club work for 10 years. Another pen of Southdowns, owned by Kenneth Disch of Evansville, Wis., took the third prize.

Oklahoma Prince, a Chester White barrow, was proclaimed the champion hog. He weighed in at 293 pounds. He will be eligible for the open show classes tomorrow. The owner is Aaron Gritzmaker, 20, from Lahoma, Okla., for whom the International prize was a new conquest. Aaron is in partnership with his father on a half section. They raise Chester White hogs and pure bred Shropshire sheep.

Second and third prizes in the barrow section were awarded to Roger Amslee of Rensselaer, Ind., and Harlin Lemons of Eldred, Greene county, respectively.

Of the divisional prize winners in the baby beef contest, none was more delighted than auburn haired Faith Elaine Rhodes, 12, of Mendota, La Salle county, whose Brownie took the blue ribbon for shorthorns. Faith Elaine, a high school freshman, can cook and sew and likes to play volley ball.

4-H Leaders to Be Honored.

Fame precedes a Texas boy and an Indiana girl arriving today for the 18th national 4-H club congress, which is concurrent with the exposition. Willie L. Ulich and Dorothy Arvidson are to receive trophies and the $300 Edward Foss Wilson scholarships for 4-H leadership at Thomas E. Wilson's annual party for all delegates to the congress—there are more than 1,400 from 46 states and the territories—tomorrow afternoon and evening in the Medinah temple.

The Hoosier champion leader is 17 years old and a freshman at Purdue university. Lafayette is her home town. Miss Arvidson has been an active 4-H girl for eight years, and during the last three years has supervised the club projects of 129 members in entomology, clothing, and baking.

Young Ulich, whose home is at Caldwell, Tex., has preached the 4-H gospel up and down the broad plains of his state. He has been president of his home and county clubs and of a hog breeders' association, and for three years has been a local leader of 4-H swine, cotton, and poultry projects. He coached two state champion judging teams and four demonstration teams that took one state and seven county blue ribbons. On week days Willie is a star athlete at his high school and on Sundays he is a Sunday school teacher.

DAN D. CASEMENT, KANSAS RANCHER, HONORED BY CLUB

Capt. Dan D. Casement, cattle breeder and rancher of Manhattan, Kas., was the guest last night at a dinner in his honor in the Saddle and Sirloin club, at which his own portrait was unveiled and hung in the gallery of those who have contributed most significantly to American agriculture.

Capt. Dan D. Casement. [Painting by Joseph Allworthy.]

Capt. Casement was described in the ceremony as stockman, farmer, patriot, exponent of pioneer self-reliance, personal freedom, and individual independence that make the American tradition. William Allen White, Emporia, Kas., editor, was one of the speakers.

The presentation of the portrait was made by Charles Redd, president of the National Wool association. President Charles E. Snyder of the club accepted. Personal reminiscences were given by C. A. Otis of Cleveland and Alan F. Wilson of Chicago.

Capt. Casement was described by the club president as a glamorous figure in the live stock world and as one who in 1934 had entered in the battle against the forces that would refuse the American people the right to develop and maintain their own souls.

There were more than 300 sponsors of the portrait dinner ceremony.

OKLAHOMA WINS COLLEGE TITLE AT STOCK SHOW

Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical college of Stillwater, Okla., won the intercollegiate crop championship at the stock show last night, scoring 4,140 points out of a possible 4,401. Judging was based on the quality of samples of grain and hay.

Second place went to the University of Nebraska and third to North Carolina State college. Kansas State college was fourth. Next in order were Iowa State, Texas Tech, University of Minnesota, Texas A. & M., Michigan State, and Pennsylvania State.

The individual championship went to Milo E. Tesar of Tobias, Neb., with 1,395 points out of a possible 1,467. The next three places went, respectively, to John McGraw of Sayre, Okla., Hugh Rouk of Beggs, Okla., and Estil Brazil of Sentinel, Okla.

THE GLAMOR GIRL IS A CLAMOR GIRL, EMPLOYERS FIND

Charm and Common Sense Needed in Jobs.

Why are girls hired or fired? This is the fourth of a series of articles intended as a guide for the young girl seeking work.

BY MARCIA WINN.

Many girls sigh for glamor. When they start to look for a job they adorn themselves with what they consider its attributes. And it usually works against them.

Men like charm in their secretaries, but they don't want glamor, according to Miss Mary Dailey, director of the Collegiate Bureau of Occupations, a nonprofit employment agency at 5 South Wabash avenue. She said glamor is desirable only in a receptionist. Otherwise, it's too much trouble—and no man invites that.

An employer may call and say: "Don't you dare send me a blonde!" as occasionally happens. He may say: "I want a girl 5 feet 3 inches tall," which is not unusual, or he may specify her habits—such as that she neither smoke nor drink. No one ever asks for a fat girl, or one who is unattractive.

Attractive? Yes, but

"Men often say to me," Miss Dailey said, "'I have to sit across the desk from her, and I like to be able to enjoy the person sitting on the other side of the desk. But don't send me one who is glamorous.'

"The ideal girl is one with a good home and background. They want her to be good looking, but no Follies beauty. They want her to keep her mind on her work and not always on the mirror, yet they want a gir' whose appearance will grace the office."

Miss Dailey believes that most employers approve of a normal, intelligent application of lipstick. Fingernails, she says, are a variable problem. Colored polish is an anathema with many, and no one. she says, likes the "claw effect that protrudes half an inch over the finger tip."

Common Sense Wanted.

"They don't want some one who is a marvelous scholar, with no common sense," Miss Dailey continued, "but they want brain and common sense tempered with a sense of humor. To me, good grooming is basic.

"If a girl comes in who isn't well groomed, we take it for granted she doesn't have very good taste. If not in good taste about her clothes, she won't use good judgment in business. It goes together.

"We won't send out girls who wear heelless, toeless shoes, or girls without hats. We tell them, too, that wild, long, fluffy bobs are fine on a college campus but not in an office. And gum chewing is definitely out of the picture."

"What qualities do you think a girl needs?" Miss Dailey was asked.

Needs Ease in Meeting People.

"The ability to listen and yet have a mind of her own," she replied. "A well modulated speaking voice. Ease in meeting people. Nine-tenths of working well with people is the ability to get along with them.

"One main thing is not to talk too much and yet not be a stick that sits and says nothing. There are many girls who talk themselves in and out of jobs because they don't know when to stop.

"You're taking a long chance, too, if you date the boss. I think it takes an awfully smart girl to do it. My opinion is that she shouldn't if she wants to keep the relationship on an employer-employé basis."

[Another article in the series on girls and their job hunting will appear in an early issue.]

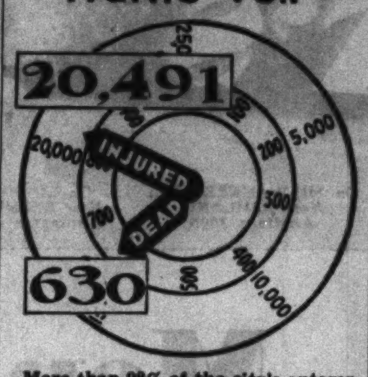
THE MASSACRE
Chicago's 1939 Traffic Toll



More than 98% of the city's automobile fatalities are of a nature physically impossible on an urban superhighway.

Woman, 50, Wed 3 Days, Dies Suddenly at Dance

Adolph and Mrs. Clara Sperling, 1456 Cornelia avenue, were married last Wednesday. Last night they were dancing in a hall at 4350 North Pulaski road. Mrs. Sperling, who was 50 years old, suddenly collapsed and died of a heart attack.

2 TRAINS WRECK CAR; DRIVER, 63, ESCAPES DEATH

Acetylene Torches Set Victim Free.

M. J. Kuechenberg, 63 years old, escaped death yesterday when his automobile was ground to a tangled mass of wreckage between two locomotives at the Mason street crossing of the Milwaukee road in Bensenville.

The engine of one train, stopped at the station, protruded partly into the crossing on the westbound track as Kuechenberg started to drive across on the way to buy a newspaper. At that moment another local passenger train, which is made up in Bensenville, switched from the west track onto the east track.

The automobile was smashed between the two engines. Bensenville firemen and railroad men immediately started to work with acetylene torches to burn away the wreckage in order to reach Kuechenberg.

His head and shoulders were visible and he was conscious. Onlookers offered him a drink of whisky to steady his nerves, but Kuechenberg declined. He said he wasn't a drinking man.

No Signs of Injury.

At the end of an hour the rescue work was completed. Kuechenberg was lifted from the wreck, but insisted he was able to walk to the ambulance. At the West Lake hospital in Melrose Park physicians found no evidence of an injury, but he was kept there for observation. Kuechenberg lives at 136 Mason street, Bensenville.

The body of a man killed Friday night by an automobile in the center drive of Humboldt park was identified yesterday as that of Samuel Matin, 56 years old, 1350 North Kedzie avenue.

William H. Miller, 61 years old, 4424 North Pulaski road, died last night in the Lutheran Deaconess hospital of injuries suffered Friday when he was run down by an automobile at Avondale and Albany avenues. The driver was Harry Goldman, 31, of 2825 Palmer street.

Aged Woman Killed.

Mrs. Marie Hughes, an aunt of Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes, died early today in the Norwegian-American hospital of injuries suffered Friday when she was run down by an automobile at Chicago avenue and Rockwell street. She was 72 years old, lived at 2545 Iowa street, and had been a resident of Chicago for 60 years. The driver of the car which killed her was Matt F. Schwartz, 3101 78th avenue, Elmwood Park.

Paul Irrgang, 91 years old, was fatally injured by a hit and run car at Waveland avenue and Pulaski road last night. He died early today in the Belmont hospital. He lived at 3719 North Pulaski road.

Mrs. Lucy Holloway, 50 years old, colored, 3659 Indiana avenue, was fatally injured last night when she was struck by an automobile almost in front of her home. The driver was Mrs. Anna Newson, 39, also colored, of 451 East 42d street.

Up to 2 p. m. yesterday 815 persons had been killed by automobiles in Cook county since Jan. 1. Of these 630 were killed in Chicago, where 20,491 persons were injured in the same period.

CLEVELAND ACTS IN RELIEF CRISIS; PLANS TAX BONDS

Expects State to Buy Up Million Dollar Issue.

BY CHARLES LEAVELLE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Cleveland, O., Dec. 2.—After a five hour conference with his cabinet, Mayor Harold H. Burton today announced that Cleveland will act to end its relief crisis by issuing bonds against more than a million dollars in delinquent taxes.

Mayor Burton.

This course was one of half a dozen suggested more than three weeks ago by Gov. John W. Bricker, who steadfastly has refused to summon Ohio's legislature in special session to appropriate money for this city and for Toledo, which also is in distress.

Gov. Bricker has declared that Cleveland has the power to help itself and must stop looking to the state in its recurring relief crises.

WPA Help Inadequate.

Mayor Burton said additional WPA assistance and extra food allotments from the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation, which have been promised, will be inadequate to meet the need and, because of delays involved, may be too late.

"Having made certain that we have done everything in our power to help ourselves and convinced that the state does not intend to pay us the money it owes us, we have determined to enter negotiations with the state, looking to the purchase of Cleveland delinquent tax bonds," the mayor said after his cabinet meeting.

"Our legal authority and bond counsel have told us repeatedly that we cannot legally issue additional bonds, but since Attorney General Thomas J. Herbert is willing to say we can, we will make the effort."

Charge Unfair Tax Load.

The mayor's mention of money the state owes Cleveland referred to the city's contention that tho it is the heaviest contributor of state taxes it does not receive its share of the total tax revenue.

The plan is to have the state purchase the bonds for the Ohio Teachers Retirement fund, as suggested by the governor.

On Dec. 10 all relief funds will have been spent and the city's 45,000 reliefers will be without food. If negotiations with the state fall thru and no money is available from other sources, Mayor Burton will suspend enough of the city's employés—including police and firemen—to provide funds for food, he said.

Tussle in Dixie Political Clashes

W. L. Miller (center), fired by Gov. E. D. Rivers of Georgia as chairman of the state highway board, being removed forcibly from highway building by W. C. Grimes (left), capitol custodian, and Clay Camp (right), executive department employe. [Associated Press Wirephoto.]

Clerks resisting efforts of State Senator James A. Noe to photograph New Orleans poll books in sheriff's office. He brought along two photographers. Noe said he would try again next Tuesday.

Refuses to Get Out

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 2 (AP).—His glasses broken and one hand bleeding, W. L. Miller, state highway board chairman, was forcibly ejected from his offices tonight after a scuffle with representatives of Gov. E. D. Rivers.

Miller, dismissed earlier in the day by Rivers after a prolonged dispute over policies, was dragged from the highway building by Capitol Custodian W. C. Grimes and Clay Camp, an attaché of the executive department. The chairman had refused the governor's order to vacate the office.

Holds Court Order

New Orleans, La., Dec. 2 [Special].—State Senator James A. Noe declared today he would invade the sheriff's office next Tuesday in a fresh attempt to photograph poll registration records. Armed with a state Supreme court order, he and supporters entered the office yesterday. Deputies refused to deliver the books, and a free for all tussle followed. Senator Noe, who is a candidate for governor and vigorous foe of the Earl K. Long administration, charged that the books are being fixed.

13 CONTRACTORS INDICTED IN PWA HOSPITAL PROBE

Foundation Sinking Under Costly Structure.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 2 [Special].—Seventeen indictments charging conspiracy to defraud the United States were returned by a federal grand jury today after an investigation of the foundation work on the $14,000,000 Charity hospital in New Orleans.

The foundation of the 17 story building, one of the largest of the Public Works administration's hospital projects in the country, has been damaged by sinking. The indictments are the result of a department of justice drive to reduce building costs thru a general investigation of PWA projects in Louisiana.

13 Individuals Named.

The grand jury charges named 13 persons, three contracting firms, and the New Orleans chapter of the Association of General Contractors of America, Inc. They were charged specifically with diversion of PWA funds.

A few days before the bidding on the hospital job, it was charged, members of the contractors' association held a meeting at which it was decided to double the chapter fee of the organization. They are said to have worked out a system whereby bidders on the hospital contract would add arbitrary amounts to their bids.

How System Worked.

In accordance with this plan, the government charged, R. P. Farnsworth & Co., Inc., the low bidders, added $7,620 to its bid. After this company received the contract, it paid $8,292 to the association chapter and the chapter then paid out $840 to each of the firms and individuals, it was alleged.

The indictments named the contractors' association; the Farnsworth company and its president, O. J. Farnsworth; the W. Horace Williams company and W. Horace Williams; Doullut & Ewin, a corporation, and James P. Ewin, an officer; Summa Caldwell and Monte E. Hart; Robert and John Burkes of Burkes Brothers; Henry and Arthur Boh, and Arthur La Garde, formerly partners in the firm of Boh & La Garde; T. A. Pittman, Lionel F. Favret, and Herman T. Makofsky.

TRUCK DRIVER ROBBED OF FURS.

Harry Berg, 6624 South Halsted street, driver of a delivery truck, was robbed of fur coats valued at several hundred dollars by five Negroes in the rear of 6124 South Park avenue.

JUDGES' OUSTER POSSIBLE IN SPITE OF HORNER STAND

Perry Cites Assembly's Removal Powers.

The legislature has a method for removing judges from office which is not dependent upon Gov. Horner's inclusion of the question in his call for the forthcoming special session of the general assembly, State Representative Joseph Sam Perry [D., Wheaton] said yesterday.

The governor has announced he will not mention impeachment proceedings against Municipal Judges Eugene J. Holland and Eugene L. McGarry in his legislative call. The request that such proceedings be included was made by Richard J. Lyons, a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor.

Representative Perry has made a careful study of the impeachment laws. He attempted to institute impeachment proceedings against Judge Edwin L. Wilson of Joliet in the 1937 legislature and failed by two votes to obtain an investigation of Wilson's protection of slot machines by injunction. Wilson was defeated for reëlection last June 5.

Power Vested in Legislature.

"There is a method other than impeachment which the legislature may use to remove unfit judges from office," Perry said. "Little known but powerful, this phase of the law may be resorted to without need for its mention in the call for a special session.

"My judgment is that the writers of the Illinois constitution were so interested in protecting the integrity of the bench that they inserted this clause so that unfit judges could be removed whenever the legislature is in session."

The clause is contained in paragraph 30 of Article 6 and reads:

"The general assembly may, for cause entered on the journals, upon due notice and opportunity of defense, remove from office any judge, upon concurrence of three-fourths of all the members elected of each house."

Extreme Penalties Absent.

Perry explained that this does not carry the extreme penalties of impeachment, which provides that the impeached official must not only be removed from office but also loses his right to hold other office "of honor, profit, or trust." Impeachment requires a mere majority in the house and a two-thirds vote in the senate.

"There would not have to be a formal trial, with the house acting as grand jury and senate acting as trial jury, as in the case of impeachment," Perry said. "And also, because of the lighter penalty, it might be possible to get the required votes even tho they are more than are required for impeachment."

Judge McGarry [not to be confused with Municipal Judge Joseph H. McGarry] recently was freed on charges of malfeasance when Judge Joseph A. Graber in Criminal court ruled that McGarry was not accountable to the courts for judicial actions. Judge Holland has been revealed as a business associate of Edward J. O'Hare, slain front man for the Capone syndicate. Both judges now are presiding in civil courts.

Baltimore Woman Plunges to Death from Hotel Room

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 2 (AP).—Miss Edith M. Lansburgh, 58 years old, sister of Sidney Lansburgh, wealthy president of Baltimore's Associated Jewish Charities, jumped or fell to her death tonight from the 16th floor of the Lord Baltimore hotel. She was a daughter-in-law of Jacob Epstein, retired Baltimore merchant, art collector, and philanthropist. Members of the family said she had been ill for several weeks.

SHOT IN QUARREL OVER BUYING OF WOMAN'S COAT

James Brown, 45 years old, 831 North La Salle street, was shot in the shoulder and arm yesterday during a quarrel with George Stange, 52, of 65 West Delaware place. East Chicago police arrested Stange and said he admitted the shooting.

Police were told the argument began when Brown brought a coat as a gift for Mrs. Clara Sullivan, 39, owner of the house where Stange rooms. Brown had known her five months and Stange for a year and a half. She is separated from her husband.

PRISONER TELLS OF SEEING WOMAN KILLED BY PAL

Chicago Heights and Steger police were coöperating yesterday with authorities in Morris, Ill., in investigating a story told by Richard Law, 32 years old, a truck owner of Morris. He said he had seen James Bell, 37, also a Morris truck owner and the father of seven children, kill Mrs. Julia Onofrio, 37 years old, of Chicago Heights, last Aug. 22. Bell denied any knowledge of the slaying.

Law and Bell were under questioning in Morris in connection with several robberies. When Law told of the killing of Mrs. Onofrio word was sent to Chicago Heights.

Mrs. Onofrio was the mother of three children and the wife of a factory worker. Her body was thrown from an automobile near the Lincolnshire Country club, near Steger. She had been shot three times in the head. Law said he and Bell had picked up a woman in a tavern in Chicago Heights and that Bell tried to rape her and she resisted. Law said the shooting occurred after she had left the automobile and was running away.

Negro Robber Slugs Aged Widow; Steals Her Purse

Mrs. Margaret Lowe, 79 years old, a widow, was struck in the face last night by one of two Negro thieves and robbed of her purse, containing some change, keys, and papers. The assault occurred in front of 2727 Washington boulevard as she was on her way to her home at 3017 Washington boulevard. Mrs. Lowe is the widow of Charles L. Lowe, who retired as auditor of expenditures of the North Western railway in 1929 after 57 years' service.

TAVERN OWNER GETS PRISON IN PATRON'S DEATH

Henry Kettleson, 39 years old, owner of a tavern at 3404 Montrose avenue, was sentenced to 1 to 14 years in Joliet penitentiary yesterday after being found guilty of manslaughter. The charge grew out of the death on Sept. 1 of Michael Holz, 59, a barber.

After sentencing Kettleson, Judge Michael Feinberg complimented the six women jurors who with six men found Kettleson guilty after an hour's deliberation.

Holz, a tavern patron, died after he fell and struck his head on the sidewalk. Witnesses said Kettleson knocked him down after a quarrel over a pinochle game. Kettleson testified that Holz slipped. Kettleson's attorney was given 60 days to file an appeal after a motion for a new trial had been denied.

GEORGE WASHINGTON SAID:

"Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other."—From the Farewell Address.

AMERICA AVOIDS THE SEA WAR.

America went to war in 1917—as of record—because Germany resumed its unrestricted submarine campaign against shipping. Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador in Washington, knew it was war when he communicated his government's intentions to Secretary Lansing of the state department. Mr. Lansing also then knew he had the war he and the interventionists wanted.

Without the overt acts committed by Germany the war sentiment in the United States, altho seeking opportunity, might have been unable to find the open door. When the embargo repealers this year undertook to sell arms and munitions they were forced by the opposition to make some changes in their program. Among these concessions was the cash and carry provision of the new neutrality law. The repealers had to put forth this proposal as evidence that they really sought peace and not war. They would have been content with the embargo repeal or with the repeal of the entire neutrality act. Public opinion was against them and they were forced to compromise.

The repealers accomplished their main purpose. They lifted the embargo, but with that went the exclusion of American ships from war zones. The interventionists were able to take sides in the fight abroad, but one source of war danger was closed when ships were forbidden to carry goods to countries at war or to enter dangerous waters and when restrictions were placed on American travel. The war party will have more difficulty in finding such a cause of war as it found in 1917.

COURAGE IN KANSAS.

One of the national government's latest schemes for throwing money out the window is a flood control project in the Verdigris river valley in Kansas. Once turned down by the army engineers, it was later approved by them under pressure, and is now in the authorization stage as part of a $407,855,600 pork barrel bill awaiting action at the next session of congress.

Secretary of War Woodring was sent back to his native state recently to beat the drums for the proposal, which had received the backing of some of the chambers of commerce and other organizations in the area that would benefit by the expenditure of some $31,000,000 on the flood control dams, if not from the dams themselves.

Secretary Woodring assured his fellow Kansans that the expenditure would not affect taxes in Kansas, since it would be met largely out of income and excise taxes collected in eastern states. He said Kansans, he felt sure, would fight any one who opposed in congress the distribution of the pork.

His last remark was directed at Senator Clyde Reed of Kansas. Recently Senator Reed called a meeting of 700 representatives of civic organizations at Fredonia, center of the district to receive the project.

Senator Reed told his audience that the government was proposing to spend $31,000,000 to protect land worth only $8,805,600. He warned that while the income and excise taxes might be collected in the east Kansans were paying their share of those taxes thru their purchases of the products sold by the taxpaying corporations. He said he was going to fight any such folly, even if the pork did go to his own state, and his hearers approved his stand almost unanimously.

Senator Reed, it goes without saying, is a Republican. It takes a tremendous amount of political courage for a member of congress to oppose pork for his own district, but unless congress receives some further injections of that sort of courage the profligacy of the Roosevelt administration will not be stopped. Illinois, it is to be hoped, will send to Washington next year some one to take his stand beside Senator Reed as a replacement for Tin Box Slattery.

MR. BROWDER IN ACADEMIC HALLS.

Earl Browder, in the academic halls of higher education in the east, is developing some gems of thought and curios of action which will be interesting souvenirs of intellectual activities in the cloisters of collegiate life. As is known, when the John Reed club of Harvard invited Mr. Browder as general secretary of the American communist party to address its members, the Harvard faculty refused its consent. Apparently the objection was to the use of a university meeting place and did not affect Mr. Browder's right of free speech—it only refused him a hall.

The astonishing heresy of Mr. Browder in wanting to assert the right of free speech and to defend civil liberties may be passed over lightly. He should not be asked to explain how he could defend free speech and remain an obedient servant of his Moscow masters, who shoot gentlemen with such ideas. Mr. Browder's civil liberties are to do here what he would not permit others to do if he were making the rules.

Of that truth probably no illustration would be more apt than the one given by the members of the John Reed club of Harvard when they met to protest against the faculty's action. They soon were throwing out a student because he was a Trotskyite, and then in the defense of free speech refused to permit any divergent views to be expressed.

Yale, following its traditional policy of showing Harvard up whenever possible, on or off the football field, granted permission to Mr. Browder, and Tuesday night he exercised the rights in which he does not believe. He spoke to an audience of 500 in a hall which was surrounded by 4,000 other persons. The gathering was noisy, but it wasn't enough of a riot to justify Mr. Browder's public defection from the communist code of shooting them if they speak out of turn.

FOSTERED MONOPOLIES.

This administration talks a great deal about the evils of monopoly, but the words of the New Dealers are belied by their acts.

For example: At present the Civil Aeronautics authority is conducting a hearing on the petition of the American Export Airlines to operate a flying service to Europe. The Pan-American company, which already operates to Europe, is objecting to the authorization. Perhaps the permit will be granted and perhaps it will be withheld, but that is hardly important. The important fact is that the New Deal is committed to rigorous regulation of all sorts of businesses and that regulation of this sort inevitably tends to promote monopoly.

There is no good reason why any one who wants to operate an air service to Europe should be required to ask permission to do so. The more such services there are, the better for everybody, except inefficient operators, and they are scarcely deserving of governmental encouragement. The government may properly set standards for equipment and personnel, and see that these standards are maintained in the interest of safety, but, beyond that, its interference can only retard the growth of the American air services.

It is absurd to say that there is only a limited amount of business available between the United States and Europe and that, therefore, the right to operate planes over the North Atlantic must be checked. The men who put their money into an air line are better judges of the potential profitability of the venture than any burocrat or set of burocrats. If principles of regulation such as are now in vogue had been operative in the Clipper ship era we would never have become dominant in the world's carrying trade.

So far as subsidies and the right to carry the mails are concerned, no elaborate machinery of regulation is required. The mails should be carried in the planes which will deliver them most promptly on the other side of the ocean; if other subsidies are provided, the rules should be laid down by congress, with a view to equalizing, not restricting, the opportunity.

Competition in the air services will promote the national interest and government made monopoly will retard it. The more overseas lines we have the more trained pilots we shall have, the more experience we shall have in flying the oceans, and the more skill we shall have in building planes and engines. Today we have the jump on the rest of the world; our transport planes are as far ahead of their contemporaries as the Clipper ships were in the days of sail and our airplane crews hold a comparable advantage. If we intend to retain that leadership and reap the full advantage of it, we should avoid every unnecessary interference with those who wish to get into the business.

Instead this administration is raising up a burocracy whose only business is to restrain, and retard, and hamper. Initiative and ambition are discouraged. The idea is to destroy competition or hold it down to a minimum. That will mean one or at most a few large enterprises which the government can readily control thru blackmail or just as readily acquire when the opportunity presents itself.

All government regulation tends in this direction. Radio provides another example. We have a federal communications commission which regulates the business of radio broadcasting. Today nearly half of all the stations in this country are owned by or in one form or another affiliated with the National Broadcasting company or the Columbia system, and with the fewest exceptions these two chains control the more important radio outlets.

The right to operate a radio station is granted for only a year and until recently the term has been only six months. The government asserts the power not only to take away a license for cause but also to withhold a renewal for no cause at all.

The investment in station equipment is large and in programs which will attract and hold an audience is even larger. Concentration of control over the principal stations has been fostered by the government; the abuses which can arise are manifest and scarcely need statement. The system makes it advisable for the chains to be on the friendliest of terms with the politicians of the administration; otherwise station licenses may be imperiled and the whole investment lost. To the politicians this relationship must seem little short of ideal.

Editorial of the Day

A WORD ABOUT BARBARITY.

[St. Louis Post-Dispatch.]

Speaking of the mines which are daily blowing up ships off the British coast, Mr. Chamberlain, in his speech yesterday, said the Germans "hope that these barbarous weapons can cut off our own supplies from overseas, and so squeeze or starve us into submission."

It is, of course, Mr. Chamberlain's job to impress upon world opinion the barbarity of the Germans, and there is no question that the use of floating mines, sown indiscriminately, is barbarous. In the interest of realism, however, are not the Germans attempting to do to Britain with the weapons at their disposal exactly what Britain is attempting to do to Germany, namely, squeeze or starve her into submission?

The great British blockade in the North sea is the allies' most potent weapon in this war, and it will succeed if it cuts Germany off from life giving supplies of all kinds, including the foodstuffs essential for combatants and noncombatants. There is an element of special and spectacular cruelty in the German mine laying, but its objective is no more cruel than the British objective.

It is war, not any particular people, that is barbarous, that is cruel, and all who participate in it must be barbarous and cruel.

WAR DAYS IN AUSTRALIA

BY W. A. O'CARROLL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SYDNEY, Australia [Passed by Censor].—Since the neutrality act has been amended to place America on the side of the empires practically as a belligerent in everything short of actually bearing arms, Australian opinion is that the next phase, a straight out declaration of war by America on Germany, is conditioned only by time and cautious British diplomacy. Two well informed newspapers, the Sydney Sun and the Sydney Morning Herald, speak the minds of Australians in predicting that America, soon or late, will hop in on the side of England and France. The Sun wrote:

"Short of going to war with Germany, the United States people could not have given a more practical proof of their good will toward Britain, which most intelligent Americans realize is fighting their battles for them in Europe."

The Sydney Morning Herald commented:

"At the moment, it is clear, there is no feeling in the United States for intervention in the war. But the struggle has hardly begun, and few intelligent Americans will suppose that the neutrality of their country can be guaranteed even by the most carefully drawn amendments of the neutrality act. Already American opinion has had two severe shocks in the torpedoing of the Athenia and the German-Russian handling of the City of Flint. There are certain to be others. From provocation to intervention may be a long step, but there can be no assurance that America will not finally be forced to take it."

Public and press refer to Mr. Roosevelt as "the great President" and are filled with the belief, or the hope, that his sympathy, and that of his administration, with the cause of the empires will assure him a third term.

Criticism by British industrialists of Australia's industrial policy, with particular reference to tariffs, was described as highly unpatriotic by James Hendry, president of the Associated Chamber of Manufacturers of Australia. This rejoinder was supplemented by tart references in the press to the "crown colony" conception of the commonwealth persisting in England, and pressure applied politically and otherwise to strangle Australia's secondary industries. What the United Kingdom manufacturers fear, according to cables, is that the empire's capacity to absorb British manufactures may be seriously impaired after the war by the acceleration of the development of secondary industries in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. They urge that dominion governments should refrain from too ambitious programs involving uneconomic production of highly specialized products, such as certain types of machine tools.

"Any hopes that a certain section of industrialists in the United Kingdom may cherish of retarding industrial development in Australia are so obviously futile that the expression of the sentiments attributed to them will be universally deplored," said Mr. Hendry. "They reveal a lack of empire vision that should be officially disclaimed by the British authorities. In war and in peace the development of the industrial resources of the dominions must be continued with unabated energy."

Another speaker said: "The days when British trade interests could work magic by waving a flag are dead, so far as Australia is concerned. The old imperialism yields to a nascent nationalism expressed in the commonwealth of nations. Patriotism is now labeled 'Made in Australia.'"

The Sydney Sun sums up Australian sentiment in the following editorial comment:

"Let us suppose that the United States of America had received a more tolerant treatment by Britain and that the revolution had never taken place.

"With this great country as a dominion, British culture and influence thruout the world would have been impregnable.

"Fortunately the empire, with its self-governing dominions, has outlived the disastrous policy that lost America, and there is no reason to doubt that, if it outlives the storms of the present, and of the next century to come, the commonwealth of Australia will have become an ally as much to be courted and valued as the great American republic."

What is known officially as the Second A. I. F., to distinguish it from the Australian imperial force of the previous war, has been enlisted "for service at home or abroad." A suggestion is that it may be dispatched to Singapore for garrison duty. Nearer the mark, possibly, is an apparently inspired statement in the Sydney Morning Herald that "until the empire knows definitely who are its friends and who are its enemies in this struggle Australia cannot commit herself to sending an expeditionary force abroad."

In other words, were the position in the Pacific strategically as sound as in 1914-'18, there would be no deterrent to the release of Australian troops for service in foreign theaters of war. That the commonwealth's risk of being invaded is diminishing is suggested by the government's decision to release airmen for training abroad. Further, compulsory military service for home defense has been applied only to youths attaining the age of 21 years next July. The labor movement howls at compulsion even in that degree.

All Australia's defense arms demand to preserve their identities in whatever area—sky, sea, or land—they may be called upon to fight. They demand, too, that their immediate commanders be Australians. Once the commonwealth government decided to abandon the air expeditionary force, the royal Australian air force was quick to describe the change of policy as a blow to its prestige. Fear was expressed that volunteers for overseas service with the royal air force would lose their Australian identity and become simply members of a vast empire scheme now being developed in Canada. The Australian flying corps, as it was known in the previous war, served in Egypt, Palestine, and on the western front. It lost 73 aircraft and 78 men. To its credit were 276 enemy aircraft destroyed and an additional 251 machines forced down. It produced famous aces. Besides, Australians are a race apart temperamentally; the British ways in observing discipline, in respecting caste, are not theirs. The Diggers [Australian soldiers] were "impossible" to many old school British generals in 1914-'18, but as the spearhead of the thrust they took many impossible positions.

Graziers of Australia are at heart deeply resentful of the deal handed them in the British government's purchase of the wool clip. Patriotism enjoined silence for a while, but as the facts began to leak out and individuals became vocal, even vociferous, the Graziers' association itself leaped yelping into the ring. It has been revealed that the price asked by the Australian Wool Growers' council for the clip was 15½d for a contract for one year, and 17½d for a contract for the duration of the war and 12 months after, both figures being in Australian currency. The price adopted is 13.4375d a pound.

To discourage speculation in potato supplies the commonwealth government has threatened to bring potatoes under the price commission's control. That this has not been done already is because of the strong political pull exerted by the common spud. It is grown largely in Victoria, which state returns a majority of the federal cabinet, and in Tasmania, which until early this year returned the prime minister, the late Joseph Lyons.

Export prices of Australian meat and butter, fixed under the British government's bulk purchase scheme, have intensified public unrest. While Australia is helping to feed the British people with lamb at a maximum price of 7¼d a pound, the Australian housewife is paying 1s 3d and 1s 4d. Beef goes overseas at a maximum of 5¼d, but Australian homes pay 11d to 1s 6d a pound. Australians pay 1s 5d a pound for butter, which is landed in Britain at 1s 2d a pound for the choicest grade, with reduced rates for the grades sold in the commonwealth.

THE FULLNESS OF LIFE.

NONE of us should be depressed unduly should an octogenarian friend quietly lay down the cares of life. There is something essentially beautiful enshrining the lowering of the curtain on the last scene of the last act. When we read that "he went to bed in his usual spirits and failed to waken" we look upon the episode as a blessing. As the book of common prayer puts it, "He cometh up and is cut down, like a flower."

With most of us, the older we grow the less we fear death. We look upon it as a great adventure—the launching of a bark upon an uncharted sea—confident that the voyage will be made in comfort and safety, with anchorage in a peaceful harbor.

But disease is not always kind and some of us may encounter much suffering. In these days the highest office of the physician in the presence of a hopeless disorder is to ease pain and relieve troubled thoughts. Among our great tragedies we may include the incurables who are obliged to linger for months—even years—in pain, helpless, and dependent. Common instincts of humanity demand surcease.

What strange differences human nature presents. Many so situated will find a philosophy of life that will add greatly to happiness and lessen likewise the strain upon those who care for them. Fortunate are those who are able to rise above their incapacities, with the power to fill each waking hour with sunshine. There is nothing more depressing than the querulous, fault finding, exacting oldster who is not satisfied unless every one in the home is at his beck and call constantly. A disturbed invalidism of this sort all too often is a legacy of a nervously upset childhood. As we ripen mentally and physically we cultivate compensations, things within us that may be substituted when we no longer are able to participate in every day affairs. Yes! The patient has an important rôle to play.

But the solemn duty of every medical man is to provide the softest escape for those who otherwise would be doomed to excruciating torments. Fortunately, we have drugs immediately at hand that can be employed; beneficent agents by means of which we can establish a dream state wherein all is well. I have no patience with those measures designed to prolong existence for a few hours, even a few days, when each conscious moment [and there are many] is filled with apprehension. As the heart flags, blessed unconsciousness usually comes, covering the pain racked body with the cloak of forgetfulness.

It is only when heart disease, or some other vicious malady, takes its toll in the productive years that we rebel bitterly. Science must fight valiantly to conquer those ailments that destroy vital organs and that carry down to ruin trained, alert minds and lovable personalities. The wish to survive because one's tasks have not been completed is inherent in each of us, but are we willing to make the effort? A little more attention to minor illnesses will build a constitution capable of repelling major onslaughts. Stroke, or apoplexy, while it may appear suddenly, has been years in the making. The initial causes were laid down a decade or more before the final blow. A brittle artery in the brain all too often is the consequence of bad hygienic habits dating from the more virile period.

There is an old adage, however, that may be kept in mind: "It is better to wear out than to rust out." But this does not mean that one should be foolhardy in his drive for accomplishment, with life terminating a score of years before it should. We may emulate Cato, who died at 84, in the full enjoyment of his years, filled as they were with usefulness and honor. We cannot defy time, and youth cannot be regained thru wizardy, sorcery, or gland transplantations. But its spirit may be prolonged if we will play fair with our essential machinery.

DEAFNESS.

Mrs. B. writes: My 17 year old daughter is deaf in one ear. An ear specialist can find nothing wrong. What would you suggest?

REPLY.

For your own information, the type should be determined. Has the nerve of hearing been injured? Is the defect due to destruction of some link in the chain of sound perception? Little can be done once hearing has been destroyed. Certain mechanical devices, however, may be useful.

ASK YOUR PHYSICIAN.

D. D. writes: 1. Is there any cure for a petit mal sufferer? 2. Is it advisable for such a person to marry?

REPLY.

1. While there is no absolute cure for this form of epilepsy—with proper care, medication, etc., it can be controled.

2. There is a tendency for epilepsy to appear in families. While it does not follow that one's children will have the disease—in some cases—it may be safer not to marry. The physician who has studied your case can best advise you.

THE WORLD WAR 25 YEARS AGO

[From Tribune Files.]

Dec. 3, 1914.

[128th day of world war; 94th day of present war.]

LONDON.—The German army in Poland, which with the aid of reinforcements succeeded in escaping from the Russian ring, has formed a new front and at some points has resumed the offensive. About 80,000 Russians were captured.

PETROGRAD.—The official statement from general headquarters said there is a relative lull on all the fronts. In the region of Lowicz the action continued but with less intensity.

BERLIN.—With only one dissenting vote, that of Herr Liebknecht, Socialist, the reichstag voted a new war credit of $1,250,000,000. Many members of the chamber were in uniform and wore iron crosses.

VIENNA.—The occupation of Belgrade was announced in a telegram from the commander of the 5th army corps. The Austrian army won a series of victories over the Servians.

THE POOR; THEIR RELATIVES.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—There have recently appeared in the newspapers some misleading statements regarding the responsibility of families to care for the men and women on relief. The experienced social worker knows that the relatives of these unfortunate families are almost invariably very poor themselves and have already made great sacrifices to help their needy relatives before relief is sought. "Well to do relatives" are mythical figures who exist only in the imagination of those who do not know the relief families. Family ties are as close among the poor, perhaps closer, than among well to do in any community.

Experience of more than 200 years in this country and longer in England has shown that the so-called "family responsibility" sections of the old poor laws do not save the taxpayers any money. There is the ungrateful and selfish son or daughter to be found occasionally among the poor as among the well to do, but this is so rare that it is not worth the cost of trying to make a large scale attack on collections from relatives because of these few cases.

A few years ago a letter of inquiry was sent to the judge and county attorney of every county in Illinois, asking whether, during the year, action had been taken under the family responsibility sections of the pauper law, and asking also how successful this action had been. A number of county judges agreed with the point of view already expressed regarding the family poverty. The county judge of Henderson county said that it was "somewhat difficult to enforce," since "ordinarily a pauper's relatives are not very much better off than he is." The county judge of Pulaski county wrote that within 20 years there had "not been an action of this kind in this county." He said, "The trouble is that in this poor county the relatives of destitute persons are in the same condition." These replies are typical.

In almost all the cases of nonsupport that arise under the poor law, none of the relatives of a poor person who is in need have anything that can properly be spared to help the relatives who have finally "gone on relief." Helping the needy relatives almost invariably means that something must be taken from an already too meager family budget, frequently something that the children need; it means that there will be less milk for the children, or giving up a pair of shoes that a child needs to go properly to school.

Those responsible for the public welfare must know that all of the experience of more than two centuries has shown that attempted enforcement of legal family responsibility leads to the most wasteful kind of litigation and is an additional and unjustifiable administrative expense that yields no returns of value to the taxpayers, and by dragging these poor people before the county courts adds new hardships to the grievous burdens that these men and women already have to bear. The responsibility of relatives is one of the surviving provisions of the 16th century poor law system of England that ought to be completely abolished in our American democracy.

ON THE LAKE STREET "L."

Chicago, Nov. 28.—What is the matter with the Lake street cars during the evening rush hours? Up to a month ago I thought it was one of the best lines. But now it's different. You just wait and wait and then you can't even get on the first one that comes along. The reason I say a month ago is because at that time a checker was noticed. You know, one of those fellows that watch the cars to see how close they run, how many people sitting down, and how many standing up. This particular night the car I was on was rather empty. So they took off some cars.

We need more of them, as they are much too crowded. The windows could also stand a washing. It is a wonder the motormen can see where they are going.

A LAKE STREETER.

SHE PAUSES FOR A REPLY.

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 29.—Why doesn't somebody suggest that sailors made idle by "cash and carry," instead of going on WPA, be allowed to take the places of the west coast seamen who refuse to work?

And why not stop other senseless strikes so manufacturers can pay more taxes, pay more wages to go into circulation to pay grocers, landlords, et al, so they can pay more taxes?

To a mere woman, with a narrow, feminine reasoning ability, to let a few foreign born or foreign sympathizing aliens or traitors despotically rule such a large proportion of our population seems un-American to say the least.

MARY MEARS.

FAT; CAN'T HELP IT!

Chicago, Nov. 29.—May I submit my reaction to the letter entitled "Just a Fat Policeman." I am unable to appreciate the shopworn vulgarisms in the letter because my mother taught me it was vulgar to make derisive remarks regarding the deformities of my fellow men. May I inform this witty individual that "obesity is a morbid condition known to the medical profession as a disease."

May I also add that it is not a function of the police department to shape public attitudes or psychology. It is their duty to prevent crime, and arrest and prosecute offenders, and you don't have to get your eyebrows plucked to do that. The Chicago police department will continue to function as it has in the past without the aid of cosmetics or corsets.

SAYS ELECTION WAS STOLEN.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—No wonder the Kelly-Nash machine in Cook county swept into office in the last election. They stole all the votes from the Republicans and the fact is now coming to light.

Why weren't the Republicans beaten in other parts of Illinois? Because the election was honest.

Every one that went into office on the Kelly-Nash ticket in Cook county should be put out of office.

I suggest that ballots should be marked in pen and ink where no one could erase the original cross in the circle or square. A signature written in pencil isn't as good on a bank check, so why should it be good on a ballot?

C. H.

IT HAS COME TO PASS.

Chicago, Nov. 25.—Early in September a letter in your department said that if the arms embargo was lifted the allies would use their cash to buy death dealing implements of war from America and obtain their farm products and luxuries from other countries. Well, it has come to pass!

The American farmer has lost his market to the tune of millions of dollars while those who profit from war are on top.

A READER.

FROM AN OLD FOOTBALL FAN.

Davenport, Ia., Nov. 28.—If we are to continue the game of football let us maintain it as a game of sportsmanship and not have a repetition of the type of game played at Evanston last Saturday. I leave it to the spectators to be the judges, not overlooking the type of injuries sustained by the players in the game. I have been a follower of football since 1894.

ROBT. N. CARSON.

A CAMPAIGN ISSUE.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—Can't the people get together and have Thanksgiving restored to the proper day—last Thursday in November? I am confident if all good Republican papers would take a hand in this that it would be a big issue in 1940. I know several who will vote against Roosevelt for this one thing.

J. W. S.

GYPPED BY STREET PHOTOG.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—Is it not illegal for street photographers operating in the loop to make no return for the 25 cents mailed to them in prepayment of the promised picture? It seems to me it is an abuse of the mails for the purpose of profit and should be stopped.

H. A. G.

FRIEND OF THE PEOPLE

The volume of Legal Friend mail necessitates printed statements on common questions. No copies or records of the letters or answers are kept. Hence follow-up letters should be complete in themselves. If questions are based on some previously printed problem a clipping of the article should accompany. Most of the replies are mailed. Letters bearing no name and address are disregarded. A self-addressed envelope will expedite handling.

"PROMISE TO PAY."

Chicago, Nov. 23 [Legal Friend of the People].—On a judgment note reading "I promise to pay five years from date" I understand there is a time limitation of ten years from the date of expiration of the five years. Now my question is:

1. Is there a time limitation on a judgment note that reads I promise to pay on demand and does not mention any specified time?

2. In this particular case the note will soon be 10 years old and no demand has ever been made as yet, due to the fact that the mother in said case knows that her son hasn't ever had the money to pay his debt to her. In fact, he hasn't even paid any interest that said note calls for.

3. Now this mother made a will and in all fairness to the rest of her children, she mentions in it that the money her son owes her on this note should be deducted from his share. Now she is wondering if there is any time limitation wherein this demand must be made or is the time unlimited?

L. M.

1. Yes. The statute will begin to run on such a demand instrument from the date of its issue.

2. If the debtor is not willing to renew, we advise you to employ an attorney for court proceedings, at once.

3. It was held in 120 Ill. App. 93 that a debt barred by the statute of limitations could not be deducted from the beneficiary's share. The authorities from other jurisdictions are in conflict. See 18, C. J. Page 84.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

GUTTER REPAIRS.

Chicago, Nov. 16 [Friend of the People].—I would like to know what can be done in regard to a neighbor's leaky rain gutters. In the summer the water pours out of them and is sinking my sidewalk. In the winter it freezes and I can't use my back entrance. I can't ask them to do anything because they are not the people one can speak to without being cursed at or called a foul name, so the only turn that is left to me is to write and ask your advice. Thank you.

M. S.

Please be advised that an inspection has been made of the premises to determine whether or not a nuisance exists due to leaky rain gutters, as stated in the letter which you forwarded to this office.

Our most recent inspection indicates that in conformity with a notice, issued on Aug. 29, the roof gutters and downspouts have been replaced and properly connected.

COUNTY HOSPITAL NEEDS DESCRIBED BY NEW DIRECTOR

Plans to Meet Standards Set by A. M. A.

Dr. Marshall Davison, who will become medical director of the county hospital tomorrow, yesterday discussed the needs of the hospital and his plans to meet the standards of the American Medical association and the recommendations of the citizens' committee which has had the hospital under investigation.

Dr. Marshall Davison.

The big needs, he said, cost money, and they are critical. These are a new contagious hospital, an obstetrical department, more room for the acutely ill, and an out-patient department.

Tells Need for Expansion.

"We must work for the passage of a bond issue to expand the hospital," he said. "Plans are all drawn for the new building on Damen avenue. There never will be a time when the load on the hospital will become less, and we might as well face the necessity of expansion with the growth of the city. There are only 200 or 300 beds in the city outside this hospital for the Negro population of 250,000."

Dr. Davison has been head of the surgical department of the hospital since 1937 and has been a physician there since 1926. He said he enters upon his new job with confidence that it will be worked out to the satisfaction of the American Medical association and the citizens' committee.

The medical association took the hospital off its accredited list in 1938. Many improvements have been made since then. The buildings have been rehabilitated, a new laundry installed, the X-ray department reëquipped, and a deep therapy department put in.

Intern Training Criticized.

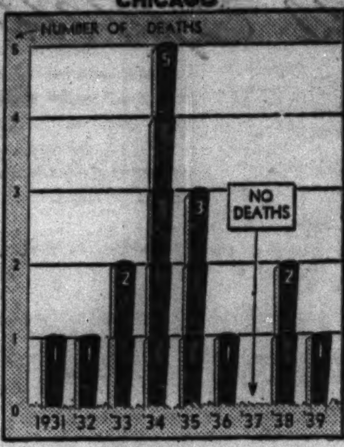
Lack of training of interns, in comparison with the volume of material afforded, was one of the chief complaints of the medical association. The staff of attendants was criticized because it was felt that they did not spend enough time in the hospital.

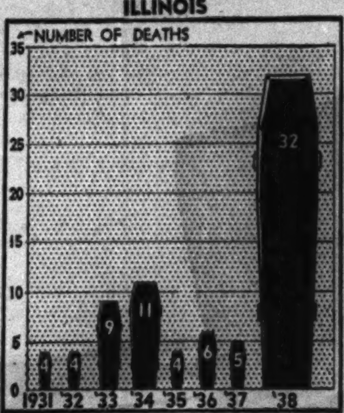
"There are no radical changes in prospect," said Dr. Davison. "The basis is there, but the hospital has had a sort of mushroom growth and needs reorganization and attention to detail. I will put in a full eight hour day there and also keep my office at the University hospital, which my father founded.

"We will bear down strongly on intern supervision. The program for additional training will make them better in the hospital and better when they get out."

Rabbit Fever Rises

Record of deaths from tularemia in Illinois and in Chicago, beginning with 1931. The Chicago 1939 figure is for the first 10 months of this year.





Dr. A. C. Baxter, head of the state health department, yesterday issued a warning to rabbit hunters to beware of those animals which seem lazy or ill. He also advised all persons handling wild rabbits to wear rubber gloves.

Dr. Baxter said that there already had been 205 cases of tularemia or rabbit fever reported this year, as against 98 for the same period in 1938. The increase is significant in that 1938 with 32 deaths, was the worst year both for the number of deaths and cases. The previous high total was 11 deaths in 1934.

Dr. Baxter also said that the risk of diphtheria was greater, with 1,288 cases reported this year. He said that there was no likelihood of a sweeping epidemic, altho there might be local outbreaks. Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, president of the Chicago board of health, reported that there had been one death locally from tularemia to date. There were two deaths last year.

George Harris, 801½ Butrick street, Waukegan, was robbed of $335 by pickpockets last night as he was leaving the First National bank, 1 South Genesee street, Waukegan. Harris missed the money after an elderly man had suddenly blocked his path, and another man had bumped into him from behind. Three other pickpocket thefts, presumably by the same men, were reported in Waukegan stores earlier.

MARY CHRISTMAS CHEERS A WORLD LIST OF SHUT-INS

Racine, Wis., Dec. 2 (AP).—Mary Christmas, who has devoted her life to bringing to shut-ins — especially children — a touch of the holiday cheer her unusual name implies, is doing her Christmas mailing early.

Mary Christmas.

The smiling Racine housewife, annually deluged by mail, already is at work on her cheerful custom of sending Christmas greetings to the many cripples and invalids who have written her from the far corners of the world.

Mrs. Christmas has five children of her own to keep her busy, but the Racine Junior Chamber of Commerce is assisting her this season in handling the mail. Her name has made her home a clearing house for children's requests to Santa Claus and headquarters of a correspondence club whose members mostly are physically handicapped.

Two Republican Justices Named to N. Y. High Court

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 2 [Special].—Two Republican Supreme court justices from upstate cities, Charles B. Sears of Buffalo and Edmund H. Lewis of Syracuse, were named by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman today to vacancies on the Court of Appeals bench, the state's highest tribunal.

A RESETTLEMENT LACKS SETTLERS AND SUIT'S FILED

Golconda, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—Details of the government's failure in efforts to establish a resettlement project in southwestern Pope county are disclosed in a suit for $100,000 damages on file in Circuit court here as a result of the exploded bubble.

Location of Abandoned Project.

The suit was filed in behalf of A. L. Robbs, former owner of the site that was to have become a thriving community. It is directed against the federally financed Illinois Rural Rehabilitation corporation, thru which $300,000 allegedly was spent before the project was abandoned.

Attorney D. L. Duty of Marion, who filed the suit, is nearing completion of his evidence in preparation for the hearing.

One of the early matters to be argued is the government's effort to enter the case as a defendant. After the suit was filed, federal attorneys sought to intervene on the ground the land Robbs sold to the Illinois agency subsequently had been transferred to the government.

Robbs contended he sold 600 acres of land to the rehabilitation corporation on the agency's assurance that a community would be established from which he would derive benefit.

CITY DISCLOSES LAKE CALUMET AIRPORT PLANS

Asks WPA Assistance on Fill-in Project.

Mayor Kelly announced yesterday the completion of plans for a proposed airport to be constructed on filled land at the north end of Lake Calumet. The plans, developed by Oscar E. Hewitt, commissioner of public works, have been submitted to the Work Projects administration for approval as a work project. They will be discussed at a public hearing to be held Dec. 20 by Maj. S. N. Karrick, district United States engineer. War department permission must be obtained to fill in the lake.

The proposal, according to Hewitt, is to fill in the lake from 110th street to the north end at 103d street.

How Work Would Be Done.

The operation would be begun by building an earth dam across the lake at 110th street. Water in the north end then would be pumped into the lake south of the dam. Workmen then would remove the surface soil from the lake bottom and several feet of clay from beneath the surface. [The average depth of the lake is three feet.] The area next would be filled in with refuse to the ground level. The clay and earth then would be placed on top.

The proposal is to construct three runways on the area. They would form a triangle, the base of which would be approximately 4,000 feet long.

The rest of the lake would remain free for the proposed Lake Calumet harbor project, Hewitt said.

Six Features Outlined.

Hewitt outlined six features of the proposal. They are:

1. The airport would provide a space for the location of airplane factories which the Association of Commerce wishes to assist in establishing here.
2. A landing field would be provided for private planes now crowded out of Chicago airport by commercial ships.
3. The field could be used for testing purposes by the manufacturers.
4. The city would benefit by having a desirable dumping ground during the fill in process.
5. The project would demonstrate the value of the land fill method widely used in New York City to dispose of refuse.
6. The project would provide work for approximately 6,000 men.

Aldermen William A. Rowan [10th] and Arthur G. Lindell [9th] have been active in promoting the project.

ADVERTISE IN THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

FLAGSTAD USES HER HEROIC ART AS BRUNNHILDE

Opera Performance Has Zest, Splendor.

BY EDWARD BARRY.

Kirsten Flagstad, making her fifth and final operatic appearance of the season, last night found herself among the high and windy crags which Civic Opera house artisans provide for Wagner's "Die Walküre." This setting fits Falgstad and her heroic art better than any of the others in which she appears.

As Brünnhilde last evening her performance had the breadth, zest, and the touch of splendor which we have learned to expect in everything she does. The fresh, out-of-doors quality of the "Ring" dramas was caught magnificently in the war cry with which the heroine makes her very first entrance.

Rose Bampton as Sieglinde.

But the evening brought forth good things even before Mme. Flagstad appeared. Rose Bampton, singing her first Chicago Sieglinde, helped to extract from the first act the pathos and tenderness which the composer wrote into it. The vast bulk of her work enchanted the audience by its delicacy, maidenliness, and fervor. Miss Bampton achieved a highly expressive, tear stained quality in that superb phrase in which Sieglinde assures Siegmund that he cannot bring ill fate into a house where ill fate has made its home.

Rene Maison made Siegmund's music lyrically beautiful without weakening it or sentimentalizing it in the least. Douglas Beattie was a frightening Hunding who provided sonorously and expertly the contrast without which the act as a whole might conceivably become milky or oversweet.

Conductor McArthur Praised.

In this same first act Edwin McArthur did some of the best conducting we have heard from him. The searchingly lovely music which accompanies the first stirrings of love in the bosoms of Sieglinde and Siegmund he molded into shapes of a quite phenomenal expressiveness. The orchestra was a great omniscient commentator, as it should be, and never a mere accompaniment.

In a performance crowded with firsts, Julius Huehn introduced his Wotan to Chicago. Sonia Sharnova sang Fricka with great musical dignity.

"Aïda" at Matinée.

The afternoon audience saw a repetition of "Aïda"—but a repetition recast out of all resemblance to the performance of three weeks ago. This time Dusolina Giannini sang Aïda and Giovanni Martinelli Rhadames. Amneris, Amonasro, Ramfis and the king went to Elen Longone, Carlo Morelli, Virgilio Lazzari, and Mark Love, respectively. Henry Weber conducted.

While Mrs. Michael hugged her new 5 pound 12 ounce infant in a hospital, her husband flew over the city scattering hundreds of cigar laden little parachutes made of diapers.

Stenciled on each parachute were the words:

"A girl."

CHICAGO'S SCOTS FETE ANCIENT FEAST O' HAGGIS

In a room hung with plaid banners 1,500 Scots and Americans of Scottish descent had their annual feast of haggis last night in celebration of St. Andrew's day. Proceeds of the gathering in the Stevens hotel will go to the Scottish Old People's home in Riverside, established by the Illinois St. Andrew society.

Haggis is a traditional pudding made of: "Hoggie's baggie fu' o' aits-crowdie, hairts, lichts, ingans, liver an' suet a' het wi' spice, servit on a muckle ashet wi' a' the honors." It tastes better untranslated, and they ate it with seeming relish.

Dr. Albert W. Palmer, president of the Chicago Theological seminary, spoke on "The Land We Live In." Alfred Duff Cooper, former first lord of the British admiralty, who, with his wife, the former Lady Diana Manners, was an honored guest, spoke on "The Land We Left." Lord Alfred made a strong plea for American sympathy for the allied empires. Alec Templeton, blind pianist, was a surprise feature of the entertainment.

MASSEN TO STEP DOWN FROM 48TH WARD G. O. P. POST

Former Ald. John A. Massen of the 48th ward announced yesterday that he will not seek reëlection as Republican committeeman from that ward in the party primary next April, when a new county committee will be elected.

John Massen.

He issued his statement after a meeting of the ward organization in the Sheridan Plaza hotel, at which he told his associates he intended voluntarily to surrender the post he has held for 10 years and intends to devote more of his time to the practice of law. He said, however, he would continue active participation in party and civic affairs.

The organization, which has been a strong factor in Republican politics in the Uptown area for 40 years, unanimously selected Robert E. Owens as its candidate to succeed Massen and elected Massen as its permanent president. Owens, a lawyer, is judge advocate of the Uptown post of the American Legion. He was a candidate for clerk of the Superior court in 1936.

THE AUDITORIUM —FIFTY YEARS OF CHICAGO HISTORY

Anniversary Recalls Its Great Events.

Architects called it a structural miracle. Giorgio Polacco, the conductor, said its interior had the mellowness of an old violin. Chauncey M. Depew so praised its acoustics that his words were carved into the walnut mantel of a foyer fireplace. Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, came to Chicago for its dedication.

This is Chicago's old Auditorium, wonder building of its age, which will observe the 50th anniversary of its dedication Saturday. Behind it is a half century in which it played so great a part in Chicago's history that it may be said to be Chicago itself.

Those Who Trod Its Boards.

Here, on its double stage, Calvé sang her Carmen, Melba her Mimi, Chaliapin his Méfistofelé, Caruso his Pagliacci, Lehmann her Isolde, Farrar her Tosca, Muratore his Pelleas, and Garden her Melisande. Here Teddy Roosevelt once showed his great teeth and thundered of a big stick. Here Clemenceau once sat and scowled because the man introducing him had said "all there is to say."

Here, in its luminous golden bowl, came Bernhardt, Ellen Terry, Henry Irving and Duse, Duse in her last appearance before she died. Here in 1906 "Ben Hur" gave its 2,000th performance. Here a ball was given for Admiral Dewey and his wife. Here in 1901 Wilton Lackaye, as Simon Legree in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," once detoured [in his carriage] into the orchestra pit.

Man with a Lariat.

Here, a tiny item on the program of "The Girl Rangers," a Mr. Will Rogers manipulated a lariat to the tune of the "Carnation Waltz." Here was the chrysanthemum show and countless world war benefits. Here in 1910, when grand opera first was shown for a top price of $2.50, so indignant were John McCormack and Nicola Zerolo that they refused to sing.

Once its vast interior was rebuilt for Rinehart's "The Miracle" until it resembled a great cathedral. Once, in 1893, a pageant, "America," ran for seven months. Its receipts in the first months surpassed anything ever known. One week of 12 performances in six days netted $66,000.

Its history then is a catalog of the American stage, beginning 50 years ago Saturday night with Adelina Patti singing "Home, Sweet Home" and Clarence Eddy playing the wondrous 7,000 pipe organ.

It had been opened once before, in 1888, for the Republican national convention that nominated Harrison and Morton, but all Chicago had waited a year for the completion of the majestic structure, in which were housed a hotel, an office building, and a theater, the work of Dankmar Adler and Louis H. Sullivan.

Built to House Auditorium.

To the lover of architecture, it is an engrossing artistic document. Its great tower makes it a Palazzo Vecchio; its Romanesque granite façade, heralded as one of the greatest examples of the Romanesque revival, gives no hint that its primary purpose was the housing of a great auditorium.

But 50 years have come and gone. The Auditorium has been the scene of rare joy, strange vicissitude. It has been closed, remodeled, reopened in 1932, despite the threat at one time that it was sinking. Built on floating foundations, it had sunk 22 inches by 1922, but no one seems to worry about it now. They still enter it happily, with the warmth and love one gives to an old friend.

ILLINOIS, MIRACLE OF THE PRAIRIES, MARKS BIRTHDAY

121 Brief Years Span Epic Growth.

Illinois has a birthday anniversary today—its 121st.

These years represent a panorama of human history which extends from Indians living in a sort of new stone age civilization to a round table discussion by radio today over world problems.

When Illinois was admitted into the union on Dec. 3, 1818, all that was needed for the new white settler to make a home here were a pair of horses, a wagon, a cow, a couple of hogs, domestic fowl, a plow, an ax, and a few other tools.

Long ages had prepared the way. Limestone beds for future buildings had been deposited under the ancient seas. Forests and jungles had assured plenty of coal and oil.

Black Soil Prepared.

The ice ages brought rock and gravel and scoured the beds of lakes and the prairies, and started the rivers on their way. New vegetation made black soil that waited to grow flowers or corn.

Seeing eyes and thinking brains came.

Illinois emerged from the clutch of England, France, and Spain only a few years before it became a territory and then a state. It was settled by pioneers who crossed the Ohio and came up the Mississippi from the south.

Freedom of settlement was made possible by Indian wars.

Even after statehood came the Black Hawk war, in which a young captain from the Sangamon river county, Abraham Lincoln, served.

Shadrach Bond, the first governor, came from Maryland. The first capital was at Kaskaskia, but in 1820 the capital was moved to Vandalia.

Chicago Is Born.

Chicago, incorporated in 1837 with 4,179 inhabitants, had the swiftest growth of any metropolis in history.

Railroads, canals, schools, churches, colleges began to grow out of a rich energy, an unbridled ambition, a spiritual fervor. Mankind, it seemed, had been prepared for just such an opportunity.

Lincoln was formed here to take the dream of liberty into government and keep it firm thru all the shocks of civil war.

This is all so recent that tours of Illinois today bring back many of the old landmarks and much of the old atmosphere.

The Illinois State Historical society will mark the state's birthday tomorrow with a meeting and reception in the Centennial building at Springfield. Grant Foreman of Muskogee, an authority on Indians, will speak on Illinois and her Indians.

One hundred oil paintings of the high lights of Illinois history, painted by Lane K. Newberry of Downers Grove, who traveled in a trailer for eight years studying scenes, will be on exhibition today and during the month in the Lake Shore Athletic club.

Dispel Mystery

New York, Dec. 2 [Special].—A report that June Gale, stage and movie dancer, and Oscar Levant, musical master mind of "Information, Please," a radio program, had been married yesterday at Fredericksburg, Va., had friends of the couple guessing for hours today. Miss Gale and Levant had not confided their plan to their friends, and the couple could not be found for a time after they returned to New York. They showed up tonight, tho, and confirmed the report.

Levant, a Broadway composer for some 15 years, was divorced from his first wife, Barbara Mae Smith, a "Follies" dancer, in 1933.

WAR VICTIM AID IS DUTY OF ALL, JEWRY IS TOLD

Six hundred leaders of Jewish communities in the United States and Canada heard a message last night from Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York. He declared that the task of caring for European war victims is neither a Jewish nor a Christian problem but one for all humanity and civilization.

The message was read by Mrs. Lehman at the opening dinner of the 25th annual meeting of the American Jewish Joint Distribution committee at the Standard club. Gov. Lehman was scheduled to be the chief speaker, but was unable to attend. Others who spoke were Paul Baerwald of New York, chairman of the committee, and Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, vice chairman.

Speakers at today's sessions will include James G. McDonald, chairman of the President's advisory committee on political refugees, Clarence E. Pickett, executive secretary of the American Friends service committee, and Edward M. M. Warburg of New York. The committee assists distressed and persecuted Jews overseas.

RITES TOMORROW TO HAIL VOYAGE OF MARQUETTE

The 265th anniversary of the landing of Father Marquette, French Jesuit missionary and explorer, at the mouth of the Chicago river will be observed tomorrow with ceremonies sponsored by the Marquette Memorial association. The fire boat Fred Busse, decorated with flowers, will steam into the harbor from the lake at 6 a. m. There will be an evening gathering in the city hall at which speakers will recall deeds of early explorers. Patrick T. Driscoll is chairman of the memorial association.

9 IN EDUCATOR'S FAMILY GLORY IN THEIR LONGEVITY

Oldest, 89, Youngest 71, and Twins Are 86.

Normal, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—In 1862 Richard Edwards, an educator, brought his wife and family here from Salem, Mass. Nine of his sons and daughters are still living, three of them in Normal.

The average age of the brothers and sisters is 80.77 years. The oldest is 89 and the youngest 71. Their aggregate age is 727 years.

All of the sons and daughters except one followed in the footsteps of their father and taught school. He was president of the normal at Salem, Mass., and, after coming to the midwest, held in succession the presidency of the Illinois State Normal university and the St. Louis Normal at St. Louis, Mo.

President of College.

In 1888, after he had headed the three normals, he became superintendent of public instruction in Illinois. Subsequently he was president of Blackburn college at Carlinville, Ill.

Miss Ellen Edwards, 86 years old, one of the three members of the family who still live here, remembers their trip across the country when they migrated from Massachusetts 77 years ago. The others residing here are her twin sister, Miss Florence, and their "baby" brother, O. M. Edwards, 71.

Oldest Lives in Colorado.

Their six brothers and sisters are Mrs. Annie Dougherty, 89, who lives in Greeley, Colo.; R. A. Edwards, 88, of Peru, Ind.; Mrs. Mary Tyler, 84, of Clifton, Kas.; N. T. Edwards, 82, of Whittier, Cal.; G. H. Edwards, 79, of Kansas City, Mo.; and W. A. Edwards, 77, of Pasadena, Cal.

George Edwards once was mayor of Kansas City and now is a jeweler there. He is the only member of the family who did not teach school.

The brothers and sisters were last together in 1893. Their families have grown considerably since that time. They would have to hire a hall for such a meeting now for there would be 50 persons present if the original 9, and all their children, and their grandchildren attended.

ALDERMEN BEGIN ANNUAL BUDGET TASK TOMORROW

The Job Is to Make Outgo Meet Income.

The 19 aldermen who compose the city council finance committee will go into their annual huddle over the 1940 city budget tomorrow. It is expected to last 12 days and will include day and night work for the aldermen. Ald. J. M. Arvey [24th] is chairman of the committee.

If the committee is successful it will emerge at the end of that time with a workable city budget, in which appropriations meet anticipated revenues.

If the committee is unsuccessful and its results show the city's needs are greater than estimated revenue it will return to seclusion and endeavor to find additional revenues.

Report Lists Estimates.

The committee will have before it, when it starts work tomorrow, a report estimating 1940 revenues and city needs as prepared by City Controler Robert B. Upham. That report, submitted to the council last week, includes an estimated balance sheet for city finances at the end of this year which will give the aldermen an idea of the status of the city at that time.

The financial report estimates the city will have due and appropriable $130,000 in cash, $15,208,823 from back taxes, $1,871,500 from accounts receivable, and $2,000,000 from a judgment obtained by the city against Cook county for Municipal court costs, in addition to $37,000,000 in 1940 taxes.

Back Taxes Listed.

The receivable back taxes are listed according to years, along with comparable figures from the controler's report of last year:

Year—	Receivable Jan. 1, 1939.	Receivable Jan. 1, 1940.
1935	$3,874,510	$3,270,980
1936	4,394,386	1,715,874
1937	4,239,723	2,845,579
1938	4,215,034	3,680,027
1939	....	3,696,363

The report shows the city will owe in outstanding bills $9,703,791, compared with $10,983,403 in the report of last year. The city is continuing to pay outstanding bills of more than $1,000 at the rate of 10 per cent a month. The possibility of increasing payments, according to Upham, hinges upon the collection of delinquent taxes.

Increase in Judgments.

While the report shows a reduction in outstanding bills, it also shows an increase during the year in judgments against the city. Last year they were $2,197,336 and this year $3,600,000. Upham explained the increase is caused by the failure of the city to make payments on judgments because of lack of funds.

The remainder of the controler's report, which will be studied page by page by the finance committee, is Upham's recommendation for the 1940 budget. It includes the amount appropriated and spent for each item this year, the amount each city department head desires for next year, and finally the amount the controler believes should be appropriated.

Department Heads to Appear.

It is in the column of figures compiled by Upham that the finance committee will face its problem. In every department some request has been made by a department head and the controler has deemed it unnecessary, in the light of the city's limited funds.

Department heads will be given opportunities to appear before the finance committee and explain their requests and the committee will then decide whether they should be included in the budget. The committee may also pare down requests Upham has allowed.

Departmental estimates for 1940 totaled $64,274,248. The controler has reduced that figure to $58,206,175.

Police, Fire Budgets Cut.

Two of the major reductions made by Upham were in the police and fire departments. The police department estimate totaled $18,983,699, compared with $18,261,785 appropriated last year. It included a request for 350 additional uniformed men to bring the force to 6,000. The controler eliminated the request for more men. He estimated the 1940 police appropriation at $18,182,774.

The fire department asked for $9,267,583, compared with $8,315,221 last year. That request included 250 more men, a $20,000 diesel powered fire boat and $200,000 worth of new motor apparatus. The fire department recommendation was cut to $8,402,521. The proposal for new men was eliminated; the fire boat was cut out, and the request for more apparatus reduced to $107,500.

Other Slashes Made.

The board of health 1940 request was cut from $2,846,974 to $2,810,324 by the controler. The reduction included a cut of $15,000 in the appropriation for the syphilis and gonorrhea section.

The estimate of the bureau of recreation for additional funds for improvements at the municipal airport was cut drastically. The city controler cut from $248,500 to $110,000 a request for funds to improve night lighting at the airport. Items that were entirely eliminated by the controler were rehabilitation of two city hangars, $15,800; repair of runways, $150,000, and construction of a new administration and terminal building, $1,153,838.

Seek to Adopt Slayer

[Associated Press Wirephoto.]

Mrs. Art Combs talking to Buford Loney yesterday at Marion, O., where son slain by Loney in hunting accident was buried.

Hepburn, O., Dec. 2 [Special].—After burying their only son today, a heartbroken father and mother sought to adopt the youth who killed him. In blending compassion with sorrow, the parents refused to be swayed by the fact the young slayer has been in trouble before.

Their son, Art Combs Jr., 16 years old, and the youth who took his life, Buford Loney, 15, had played together all of their lives here.

Last Wednesday Buford disobeyed his mother and went hunting with Art. In some unexplained way Buford's shotgun was discharged accidentally and Art fell dead.

Buford was held for investigation in the nearby jail at Kenton. Art's grieving mother drove there and visited him for an hour in his cell while her son's body rested in the Combs' home awaiting burial.

"Buford asked me to kiss him when I left," Mrs. Combs related. "When I did he broke down—and I did, too."

Mrs. Combs indicated she was not concerned over Buford having been in a bit of trouble before with the result that he is a ward of Judge G. B. De Witt.

LOOK FOR MORE RICHES IN 'POOR' WIDOW'S HOARD

The state's attorney's office yesterday pressed an investigation to determine the source of nearly a half million dollars, much of it in currency, which was found in two safe deposit boxes of Mrs. Janet Lincoln, who died Nov. 15.

Mrs. Lincoln was the widow of Willis L. Lincoln, a retired real estate dealer, who died a year and a half ago. Friends of both the Lincolns believed they had little money. Mrs. Lincoln before her death lived with a family at 1221 North Springfield avenue, paying $5 a week board.

Investigators believe more wealth may be found in other safety deposit boxes. Several keys were found in one of the opened vaults and these are being taken to all city safety deposit companies for examination.

AMERICA LOOKS TO ANTARCTIC AS FINAL FRONTIER

Expects Byrd Expedition to Stake Claim.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 [Special]. —Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd's current expedition to the south pole marks the first time in 100 years that the United States has undertaken an official survey of the antarctic.

The government is footing the bill in the hope that Byrd and his companions can stake out a valuable claim for this country. The United States Antarctic service was instructed by congress to investigate territorial claims and to survey the polar continent's natural resources.

The United States is the only nation represented at the south pole which has not laid formal claim to land areas there. If a declaration of possession is made, it must come from congress on the basis of recommendations of the present expedition.

War Intensifies Scramble.

For 40 years rival nations have made conflicting south polar claims. The European war has now intensified the scramble to grab whatever natural resources or strategic positions might be found there.

Authorities said claims would be based principally on private explorations made separately by Byrd and by Lincoln Ellsworth between 1928 and 1937. Other American explorers whose work in the antarctic will be consolidated by the new Byrd expedition are Capt. Nathaniel Palmer and Lieut. Charles Wilkes.

Lieut. Wilkes, later a rear admiral, headed a naval expedition to the south pole area in 1840, the last time this government financed an official investigation of that region.

Amundsen Reaches Pole.

Ellsworth saw more of the continent than any other explorer when he flew 1,800 miles from Snow Hill Island off Cape Horn to Little America in 1935. Roald Amundsen reached the pole by dog sledge Dec. 4, 1911. Capt. Robert F. Scott got there with pack ponies a month later, but perished on the way back.

In 1929, three years after Byrd had flown over the north pole, he flew over the south pole for the first time. His base was at Little America. He returned to Little America in 1934 and remained for 13 months.

The explorations of Byrd and others proved that the antarctic was one continent instead of two, as previously supposed. However, the actual land area of the continent never has been established, altho explorers have mapped most of the area.

Point to Alaska's Wealth.

Those interested in Byrd's present trip have said that in view of the unexpected economic contributions of Alaska and Spitzbergen, it would be a mistake to dismiss the antarctic continent as a frozen waste.

The Alaskan purchase, once called "Seward's folly," returned billions of dollars in gold and lumber for the $7,500,000 which this country paid Russia for the undeveloped area. Spitzbergen today is a chief source of coal for Norway and Sweden.

Exploration is said to have established that thousands of acres of antarctic land are underlaid with bituminous coal. Ore found there is of the type usually associated with deposits of gold, silver, platinum, lead, and zinc. Norwegian whalers have taken a fortune out of south pole waters since 1905, selling whale oil to American soap and perfume manufacturers.

Expect Much of Science.

It is believed competing nations are gambling that advances in the applied sciences in the next 50 years will make possible the extraction of great wealth from the antarctic.

Previous explorations erased many areas in the region heretofore marked "unknown" on maps. However, there are thousands of miles of unknown coastline lying between Marie Byrd land and Alexander land that constitute one of the greatest geographical question marks on the earth's surface. It is this region that Byrd plans to survey on his present trip.

The expedition's scientific staff also will make observations and pursue studies in many different branches of science. These fields include geography, biology, meteorology, oceanography, geology, and physics.

Two Bases Projected.

Present plans call for establishing two bases. One, designated as the west base, will be at or near Little America. The other main base, known as the east base, probably will be established in the vicinity of Alexander Land, almost due south of Cape Horn, or at some intermediate point to be determined later.

The east base will be commanded by Dr. Paul A. Siple, geographer and research associate of the Clark university graduate school of geography. He is president of the American Polar society and is a veteran of both the first and the second Byrd antarctic expedition.

Veteran Will Command.

The west base will be commanded by Richard B. Black, department of interior field representative and a member of the second Byrd expedition. He led the American party which landed on Canton and Enderbury Islands in the South Pacific in 1938 and claimed them for the United States.

Two ships are transporting the ice party to the continent. The first vessel, the interior department ship North Star, sailed from the army base at South Boston on Nov. 16. The second ship, which will follow the North Star to their antarctic base, is the one time coast guard cutter Bear. It was used by Byrd on his two previous antarctic expeditions.

Admiral Byrd left the United States at Miami, Fla., on Nov. 25, traveling by Pan American Clipper to Cristobal, Panama Canal Zone, where he joined his flagship, the North Star.

An experimental unit of the expedition of which great feats are expected is the snow cruiser designed and built by the Armour Institute of Technology at Chicago.

Byrd Plans Wide Antarctic Survey

The large diagonally shaded area has recently been claimed by Argentina despite nominal British possession. Claims of other nations in the south polar regions and previous American exploration on which the nation would base claims are shown.

MURPHY REFUSES TO CHECK DRIVE ON LABOR CRIME

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—Attorney General Frank Murphy today rejected the American Federation of Labor's contention that unions were exempt from the antitrust laws and declined to interfere with the present antitrust inquiry into the building industry.

In a letter to President William Green of the A. F. of L., who had protested against indictment of unions and asked for a statement of policy, the attorney general said that the Supreme court had ruled in several decisions that the antitrust laws applied to the activities of labor organizations and their members.

"In the Chicago milk case now pending in the Supreme court," the letter added, "your general counsel, Joseph Padway, conceded this to be true and frankly asked the Supreme court to overrule its former holdings. In the enforcement of criminal statutes it is the practice of the department to follow the construction placed on them by the Supreme court. In doing so in this instance the antitrust division has followed the usual practice, and I would not be justified in interfering with that course."

Since the nation-wide building inquiry was begun in October, indictments have been returned in five cities, and in four of these labor unions or members have been charged with violating the Sherman anti-trust act. In the Chicago case, a milk wagon drivers' union was among those indicted.

Green wrote the attorney general, asking if a statement of views by Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general in charge of the antitrust division, represented department policy.

Get Prompt and Amazing Relief with Penetrating Omega Oil—35 Cents

Eases Muscular Backache and Chest Pains

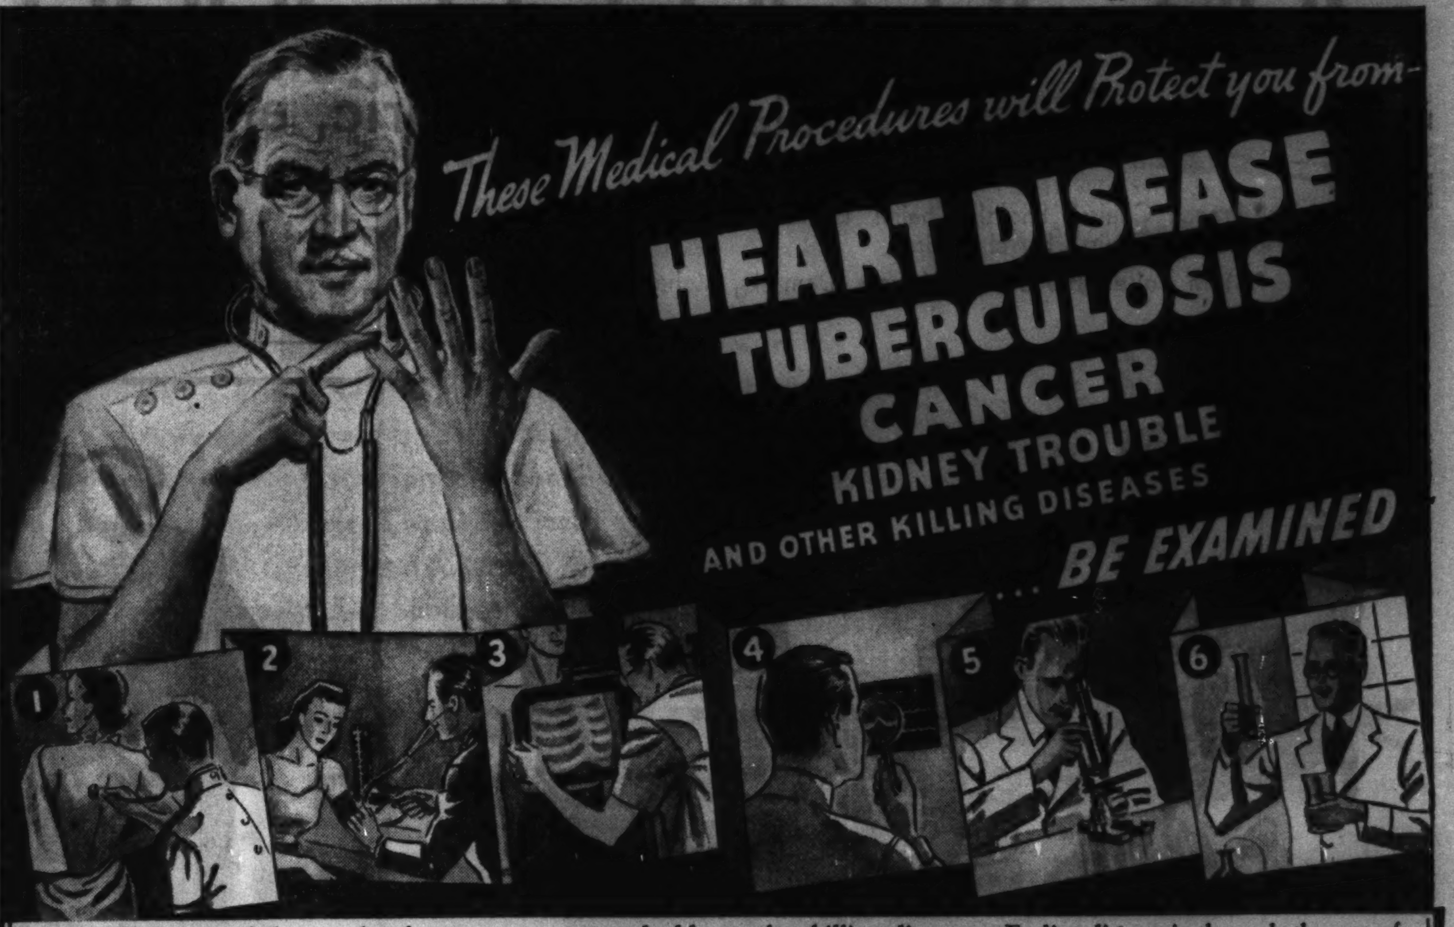
Perhaps the agony of lumbago has laid you flat on your back and you can't move without a pitiful groan—penetrating Omega Oil usually brings happy relief.

It may be that the piercing pain of neuritis or muscular rheumatism makes existence almost unbearable—medicated Omega Oil is often gratefully helpful.

If you are distressed with aches, pains or soreness, you ought to know that Omega Oil is a powerful reliever—it's got the real stuff in it that helps relieve pain—prove it.

Don't forget to take down from the shelf that helpful bottle of good old Omega Oil when backache keeps you in misery—when feet are sore and aching—when neck is stiff or your arm or leg is sore and painful.

You'll appreciate the real downright medical goodness of this penetrating oil—rub it in good—it won't stain, burn or blister—35 cents is all it costs anywhere in America.



WHILE tens of thousands of persons, young and old, are enjoying years of life that would have been forfeited a generation ago . . . there is still an appalling loss of life from diseases that medicine is fully equipped to prevent or control. The most devastating is heart disease . . . now the leading cause of death, killing almost 300,000 persons annually. Many of its victims . . . too young to die, are struck down in the prime of life . . . often at the height of brilliant careers when they are of greatest worth to themselves, their families, and their community. Medical experience proves that early diagnosis and proper care will prevent thousands from dying.

Cancer is next in order with more than 160,000 deaths annually . . . an increase in the death rate, according to health authorities, of almost 65 per cent since 1900. Yet medicine has definitely proven that certain types of cancer are curable through early diagnosis and treatment by X-rays, radium or surgery.

Tuberculosis is another leading cause of death. Although considered by many uninformed persons to be completely under control, this disease is still a major scourge of man. Many health authorities declare it the greatest killer during the most useful period of life. Almost 100,000 persons die each year . . . the majority between the ages of 15 and 45. However, medicine offers as great, if not greater, protection against the development of tuberculosis as it does against other killing diseases. Earlier diagnosis through the use of the X-ray and other tests will effect a definite control.

Other diseases that are taking a terrible toll of human lives . . . a large majority of which could be prevented through timely medical attention, are . . . kidney and bladder disease . . . gastro-intestinal complaints . . . diabetes . . . syphilis and its resulting complications.

The greatest causative factor, perhaps, in this needless waste of human life is delay in receiving proper medical attention. To enjoy full protection against these dangerous diseases it is necessary to act promptly when symptoms appear . . . or in the absence of danger signals to seek periodic physical check-ups.

The high cost of medical care is another contributing factor. X-rays, medical laboratory tests and special examinations, when obtained through sources not equipped to provide them are expensive . . . only the well-to-do can afford them. But that barrier of high cost has been broken down by a UNITED MEDICAL SERVICE. During the past seven years tens of thousands have been examined and treated here . . . many who had found it practically impossible to obtain the medical protection and care they needed because of its excessive cost. Thousands of others have been attracted because of the completeness of our services as well as its low cost. Chicago Sunday Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

DECEMBER 3, 1939.

NAVY WINS; MT. CARMEL TIES FENGER, 13-13

OHIO STATE NAMES STEVE ANDRAKO MOST VALUABLE

4TH CENTER IN 5 YEARS PICKED BY BUCKEYES

Leads Underrated Team to Title.

Honor Roll

EIGHT Western conference football players have been named by teammates as most valuable to their teams and are in the running for The Tribune's 16th annual most valuable player award. Those named are:

Ohio State—Stephen Andrako, center.

Iowa—Nile Kinnick, half back.

Indiana—James Logan, guard.

Minnesota—Harold Van Every, half back.

Michigan—Tom Harmon, half back.

Illinois—Bill Lenich, center.

Purdue—Frank Bykowski, guard.

Columbus, O., Dec. 2 [Special].—Stephen Andrako, center and captain, today was named by his teammates as the most valuable player on the Ohio State football team, 1939 champion of the Western conference. Andrako's name now will be placed in nomination for the Chicago Tribune award, made annually to the player adjudged most valuable in the Big Ten.

It was the third time in five years a center had been the captain of the Ohio State team and it was the fourth time in as many years a center was named most valuable to the Buckeyes.

In 1935 it was Gomer Jones, then captain and a senior. In 1936 it was Ralph Wolf, then a junior, and regular center, and, in 1937, it was Wolf again. He had been named captain of the team in his senior year.

Langhurst in 1938.

Last year James Langhurst, full back and high scorer of the Big Ten, was picked for the honor. Langhurst has been named captain of the 1940 Buckeye eleven.

The rise of Andrako, or Steve as he is better known to his teammates and Delta Upsilon fraternity pals, in Buckeye athletics, is more a credit to the man than to any natural ability he may have shown on the gridiron. To the quiet unassuming lad of Ukrainian descent went the task of leading Ohio through one of the most difficult schedules ever arranged for a Buckeye team. He had the example of two fine predecessors to maintain.

Andrako did just that, playing a splendid brand of ball and proving an outstanding leader. For the first time in years there was no bickering over petty jealousies, fraternity troubles, or "senior high-hatting," on the Buckeye football squad. This was due to the personality of Andrako, who just wouldn't let it occur.

Nearly Unanimous Choice.

To cap his achievements, he led an Ohio State team, ticketed before the season opened to lose three or four games, to an undisputed Big Ten title.

Andrako, a senior in the college of commerce, was almost the unanimous choice of his fellow players when elected captain of this year's eleven despite the fact that he was not even a regular. He had played second fiddle during most of 1938 to Charlie Maag, who moved this year to a tackle post.

In the 1937 season Andrako played only 23 minutes, but this year played the full 60 minutes against Minnesota and Michigan, 58 minutes against Indiana and Illinois, 56 minutes against Cornell, and 45 minutes against Missouri and Northwestern. He was credited with 20 minutes in the Chicago game.

Gets Extra Point for Big Thrill.

It was in the Chicago game that Andrako got the biggest individual thrill out of his football playing career of eight years. He broke into the scoring column for the first time in his life by kicking a point after touchdown, the third scored by the Buckeyes in the game. The effort was Ohio's 21st point.

"I'll always remember that number," he said today. "Boy, I always wanted to intercept a pass and run for a touchdown but that one point was my first and last—what a thrill!"

His hobbies in addition to football are playing golf, a sport which he took up this year while working last summer on the new university golf course—and as he rather reluctantly admitted—"Pork chops and gravy."

Goes First to Villanova.

Andrako first played football in junior high school at North Braddock, Pa. After high school he matriculated at Villanova in 1934, and after a year came to Ohio State, "where," as he said, "I always wanted to go, anyway." He worked a year before matriculating at Ohio State, becoming a freshman in 1936.

Andrako is 22 years old, weighs 192 pounds, and is 6 feet tall.

IT'S ALWAYS A BATTLE WHEN THE BEST PREPS GET TOGETHER

Francis Meakim (No. 34), Mount Carmel right half back, tries an end run against Fenger in yesterday's city high school title game played before 75,000 in Soldiers' field. Fenger, which held a 6 to 0 lead at the half, increased it to 13 to 0 in the third quarter, but a Mount Carmel fourth period rally netted two touchdowns to tie up the battle. Mount Carmel is the Catholic league champion and Fenger the Chicago Public High School league title holder. The game was the sixth annual prep contest played for Mayor Kelly's Christmas basket fund. BY EDWARD BURNS.

Fenger was leading, 13 to 0, well along in the third period of the big charity game in Soldiers' field yesterday afternoon. Those of the crowd of 75,000 who were pulling for Mount Carmel probably felt pretty sad, for the score had duplicated the final tabulation between the same teams in last year's all-city spectacle. But those who felt sorry for Mount Carmel had reckoned prematurely. In two great touchdown marches the Catholic champs tied it up and the game ended, 13 to 13.

Tho the game ended in a deadlock, the outcome must have looked almost as sweet as victory to Mount Carmel, for the comeback of the Catholic league boys was as heroic as it was startling to the Fenger side.

Mount Carmel played thruout with its eleven starters, who certainly forgot about growing weary after being aroused by Fenger's second touchdown.

Tie Minute Before End.

Before we go back to the start of the game and tell of Fenger's halted brilliance, it perhaps is proper to set down here that Mount Carmel, hopelessly overpowered in the first three periods, during which Bob Wallis and Joe Kredens scored touchdowns and Wallis kicked a point, made one touchdown after a sixty-seven yard march, and the tying parade was for thirty-nine yards. Frankie Meakim made the first touchdown in the dramatic catching up project and Bob David the second. The tying point was kicked by Gene Dwyer, a minute before the game ended.

Fenger overcame two goal line stands by Mount Carmel before putting over the first touchdown of the game in the second quarter. Mount Carmel halted a Fenger drive on the 4 yard line. Wallis at this juncture tried to kick a field goal from placement, but his effort was blocked by Dick Kennedy and Mount Carmel recovered on the Catholic 2 yard line. After David had kicked out, Fenger surged right back on drives by Ray Florek and Harry Stevenson, but Mount Carmel called a halt again and this time the ball went over on downs on Mount Carmel's 3 yard line.

Pass Nets Touchdown.

Again David kicked out to Mount Carmel's 28 yard line, where Don Griffin made a fair catch. Three passes by Griffin were incomplete, then on fourth down with ten yards to go, Griffin faded back and threw to Wallis in the end zone for a touchdown. Wallis' kick was good, but it didn't count because Fenger was offside. His second try was blocked by Kennedy.

Fenger's second and final touchdown came early in the third period. This scoring process, like the first, came after discouragement, tho at the start of the half Fenger got a break when Mount Carmel drowsed on the kickoff and Fenger captured its own boot. This edge was dissipated a bit later when Florek fumbled and Kennedy recovered on Mount Carmel's 3 yard line, after which David kicked out to his own 32 yard line.

Griffin Goes to Work.

On the second play Griffin sprinted for a first down on Mount Carmel's 21 yard line and seconds later negotiated another first down on Mount Carmel's 9 yard line. Florek and Griffin placed the ball on Mount Carmel's 5, then, with third down and five yards to the goal remaining, Kredens went over his left tackle for the touchdown. This time the point was added by Wallis.

After the score had reached 13 to 0 the Mount Carmel fellows really went to work.

David returned the kickoff to his 33 yard line. After David had been trapped on a pass play and thrown for a seven yard loss, he tried again and this time completed a pass to Meakim which was exactly right, seventeen yards for a first down. This advance bogged down a bit, but was renewed after an exchange of kicks. David and Johnny Andretich carried the ball from their own 33

'40 Olympic Games Are Called Off

[Copyright: 1939: By the New York Times.]

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Dec. 2 [via Reuters].—Baillet Latour, president of the International Olympic committee, announced today that the 1940 Olympic games have been canceled. Interviewed by Le Peuple, he said the United States' offer to organize the games has been rejected because it would be impossible for European athletes to cross the Atlantic. The games had been scheduled in Finland.

The 1940 Olympic games have been threatened by the lengthening shadows of war for several years. Originally awarded to Tokio, they were tossed back into the lap of the international Olympic committee in the summer of 1938 when Japan became involved in its undeclared war in China.

Finland Takes Over.

Finland, a strong competitor in the track and field events in the last several Olympic meets, then offered to stage the games in its modern capital of Helsingfors. The games were scheduled to be held there next July 20 to Aug. 4.

Altho Finland specified when it took over the games that it had no intention of trying to outdo, or even match, the extravaganzas of 1932 in Los Angeles and of 1936 in Berlin, the Finns did go to considerable expense in their organization work.

It was reported that Finland spent more than $10,000,000 in enlarging the stadium in Helsingfors to accommodate 60,000 spectators and in building other competitive arenas and quarters in which to house the expected influx of athletes of the world.

Shatter Finns' Hope.

Since the war began in Europe, and more particularly since Russia entered into its Baltic moves, all except the most optimistic have doubted that the 1940 Olympics could go on as scheduled.

The Finns stuck by their plans until the last possible moment, however, as the assignment of the games to their athletically inclined country represented the fulfilment of an old hope.

Recently unofficial reports have been circulated that the 1940 Olympics might be shifted to a neutral site outside the war area, with Detroit mentioned prominently. There even was some talk of holding the games in connection with the New York World's Fair next year.

U. S. C. BEATS WASHINGTON ON PASS IN LAST MINUTES, 9 TO 7

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 2 [U. P.].—A touchdown pass with only one minute and fifteen seconds remaining gave the University of Southern California a 9 to 7 victory today over a University of Washington football team which came within an ace of marring the Trojans' undefeated record.

A crowd of 50,000 saw Grenville Lansdell, Trojan quarter back, save his team's Rose Bowl chances by fading back from the Washington 15 yard line to rifle a winning pass to End John Stonebraker, who caught the ball in the end zone.

An Uphill Battle.

It was an uphill battle for U. S. C. for three periods. After scoring an early touchdown, Washington held the Trojans in check, largely thru the spectacular punting of Dean McAdams. All afternoon McAdams shot fifty to sixty yard punts into U. S. C. territory.

Washington drew first blood shortly before the first period ended. McAdams punted sixty yards, the ball stopping on U. S. C.'s 2 yard line. Lansdell was forced to punt immediately for the Trojans and Ernie Steele, a brilliant sophomore, raced the ball two yards to the U. S. C. 21. McAdams plunged to a first down on the Trojan 9 yard line. Three plays later, McAdams shot a touchdown pass to Steele, who caught the ball in the end zone. John Mizen came into the game to kick the extra point, and the score was 7 to 0 in favor of the Huskies from Seattle.

Passes Make Thrust Possible.

Southern California's star backs—Lansdell, Ambrose Schindler, Bob Peoples, Jack Banta, all were used—and finally Doyle Nave, brilliant passer, in an effort to crush the Washington defense. But it was not until Nave filled the air with footballs in the final stages of the game, that the Trojans could batter their way into Husky territory.

It was one of Nave's passes early in the fourth period which rang up 2 points for the Trojans.

Runs Behind Goal Line.

Climaxing a drive he had engineered from his own 14 yard line, Nave threw a pass from near midfield which was intercepted by Ernie Steele one foot from the Washington goal. Steele attempted to avoid several Trojan tacklers and ran behind his goal line. The move was ruled a safety and gave Southern California 2 points.

McAdams kicked the ball into play for Washington to his own 44 yard line, where Nave started another Trojan march with a seventeen yard pass to Bob Jones, who was downed on the Washington 32 yard line. Nave's next pass was intercepted by Donald Means, who was thrown three yards from the Washington goal. Punting from behind his own goal line McAdams delivered his only bad kick of the afternoon. The ball wobbled out on the Washington 23 yard line to put the Trojans in scoring position again. Washington, however, got the ball on downs on its own 30 yard line when End Al Krueger barely missed catching Nave's pass on the Husky goal line.

Schindler Replaces Nave.

The march which won the game for the Trojans came a short time later after McAdams punted to the U. S. C. 39 yard line.

Schindler replaced Nave at quarter back when the latter was injured. Schindler threw a long pass to Bob Hoffman, who ran fifteen yards to the Washington 15 yard line. One play later Lansdell replaced Schindler and threw to Stonebraker for the winning touchdown. Phil Gaspar kicked the extra point and the game was over a minute later.

Statistically the Trojans were superior to Washington. U. S. C. gained a total net of 277 yards to 78 for the Huskies. First downs were 12 to 2 for U. S. C.

30,000 to See Packers Face Lions Today

BY GEORGE STRICKLER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 2.—Green Bay's air minded football team arrived in a downpour today to close its regular schedule against the Detroit Lions tomorrow in a national league game that will decide the Chicago Bears' chances of participating in a playoff for the western division championship. A crowd of 30,000 is expected to see the game.

Forecasts for snow tomorrow and the prospect of a muddy field in Briggs stadium, where two high school teams play a benefit today, served to heighten the tenseness of the Packers, who have not quite recovered from the scare they received in Cleveland last week. Only the blessing of a benevolent fate enabled the Packers to win the Cleveland game, 7 to 6, and maintain their half game advantage in the title race.

Packers Look to Three Stars.

Green Bay depends upon its aerial attack and the individual brilliance of Arnie Herber, Cecil Isbell, and Don Hutson to win for it its third assignment in seven years in the playoff for the league championship. Failure of this attack to accomplish at least a tie tomorrow will drop the Packers back into a tie with the Bears and necessitate a playoff in Chicago next week to decide which team will represent the western division against the eastern winner.

The eastern representative will be selected tomorrow in New York, where the Washington Redskins, cheered on by 15,000 fans from the

102,291 SEE MIDDIES BOMBARD ARMY RIVALS FOR 10-0 VICTORY

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 2 [Special].—Up from the depths of five successive defeats came a fighting Navy football team today to defeat Army in fog-bound Municipal stadium as 102,291 peered thru the enveloping mist that all but blotted out the field in the second half.

Not since 1907 have the Midshipmen humbled their arch rivals from West Point by so large a margin as they did in winning by 10 to 0 this dismal, murky afternoon under weather conditions that even a sailor would have found repugnant and which discouraged so good a navy man as President Roosevelt from keeping his appointed rendezvous.

A twenty-five yard field goal, kicked from an angle by the sophomore specialist, Bob Leonard, at the end of a march from the Navy 33 yard line to the Army 16 in the first few minutes of play, gave the men from the Severn early command of the game. They sewed it up on the first play of the final quarter after bringing the ball twenty-five yards at the end of the third.

Little Richard Does It.

Little Dick Shafer, 155 pound substitute tail back who eclipsed even the 198 pound Lenz, workhorse of the opening advance, broke loose thru the Cadet left tackle and went twenty-two yards for the longest run of the day from scrimmage and a touchdown. Leonard, coming in again to kick, made good the conversion, and that was all the scoring.

Such were the salient features of this 40th gridiron meeting between the service academies, marking Navy's first triumph since 1936 and contested in such poor visibility that it was impossible to distinguish the players or follow the flight of the ball in the final quarter.

Notables Turn Out.

Admirals, generals, governors, senators, and representatives, who were out in large numbers as usual, were lost in the heavy haze that shut down upon the scene. It was the poorest day for an Army-Navy game since 1934, when Slade Cutter kicked a field goal to end the Cadets' long period of supremacy in the series.

The Middies' special train was late in arriving and so the 1,800 cadets, hosts for the game, marched in first instead of giving precedence to their

TRADE WINDS ARE SOON TO SHIFT TO CINCINNATI

Convention of Minors Starts Tomorrow.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

The baseball men, big ones and little ones, are about to swarm on Cincinnati. Its annual convention time and, unlike most other years, there'll be a double-header for one admission. Both the majors and minors will do their stuff under one roof, the idea being that Cincinnati is entitled to some distinction because it was the birthplace of professional ball, which now has reached the ripe age of 70 years.

The minors will start their show tomorrow and continue as long as there is something to haggle about. The National and American leagues are not scheduled to get down to business until Thursday and Friday, after which they'll assemble Saturday before Commissioner K. M. Landis, who apparently is going to speak about the evils of farm clubs. The big doings, however, will be trades and rumors of trades.

Cubs in Thick of Trade Talk.

Unlike recent years no big swaps have been rumored but the silence in this connection indicates possibility of wholesale player juggling before the bosses of the game resume their leisurely life.

The Cubs, as usual, will be right in the thick of the trade talk, some of which may lead somewhere. The Cubs always have been willing traders, and altho their experiences haven't been happy they are eager to try it again, possibly on the theory that sooner or later they are certain to run onto a bargain.

The Giants also want to trade. So do the Dodgers, the Cards, the Reds, the Pirates, and the Bees. The Phillies aren't much interested in swapping, but they have a couple of athletes other clubs covet, so are in danger of being talked into something they might regret a few months hence. Two or three clubs would dearly love to capture Morrie Arnovich, the Phils' slugging fly chaser, and Morrie would dearly love to be moved into higher company.

Reds Must Get Into Market.

Just because the Reds won a pennant doesn't mean that they won't be heard from in the trade market. Their world series venture against the Yankees convinced them that unless they do make some headway by swapping, their pennant sojourn may be short. The Reds, above all items, need an outfielder who can hit, but about four other teams in the league are in the same fix and all of them can't be accommodated. There aren't that many hitting outfielders.

In the American league Detroit wants to trade, but what has Detroit to give? Boston's Red Sox are in the mood to do business but they, too, are embarrassed by the fact that they can't get what they want without giving up the few men they wish to retain. So if they do any dealing it probably will involve fellows of secondary importance.

Cub Delegates Leave Today.

The Cub delegation, composed of Manager Gabby Hartnett, Vice President Boots Weber and Secretary Bob Lewis, will start for Cincinnati this afternoon. The club's trade man, Clarence Rowland, is already on the spot. Owner P. K. Wrigley will not visit the convention until about Thursday. The Sox crowd, composed of Vice President Harry Grabiner, Manager Jim Dykes, Secretary Joe Barry, Billy Webb, newly appointed head of Sox farm clubs, and Coach Muddy Ruel will assemble in the Rhineland tomorrow.

A. A. Moves to Change Plan of 1941 Playoffs

Columbus, O., Dec. 2 (AP).—American association club owners moved today toward possible abandonment of the Shaughnessy championship playoff system which has been criticized on the grounds that it gives inferior teams too great an advantage.

Officials of the eight American association clubs, closing their annual meeting here, assigned a committee to study all playoff systems now used in organized baseball with a view toward making changes in future years. They retained the Shaughnessy playoff for 1940.

It's a Complicated Plan.

The Shaughnessy plan, also in vogue in the International league, pits first and third place teams and second and fourth place teams in four out of seven game playoffs, with winners meeting in a second series for the pennant.

Thus it is possible for the team which finished the regular season in fourth place to win the association's Governor's cup and the right to represent the league in the annual little world series against the winner of a similar playoff in the International.

Ask I. L. Coöperation.

The association invited the International league to appoint a committee to consider the playoff problem and coöperate with the association in adopting uniform playing rules.

President George M. Trautman of Columbus said he would appoint the American association committee next week.

The officials opposed a proposed revision of minor league regulations to require that first games of double-headers be nine innings. League rules already make one nine inning game compulsory in each double-header, but permit seven inning first games in the case of twilight-night double headers.

THE ARMY HEARS FROM NAVY'S WHITEHEAD

Navy Hands Army Rivals 10-0 Beating

2,300 guests. That was all the marching Army did for the afternoon except for an advance of fifty-six yards in the final quarter to Navy's 19 yard mark.

This was Navy's day and it was just that Coach Swede Larson's fighting eleven should have carried it, tho it is only fair to point out that the execrable weather conditions militated against the weapon that Army counted on most heavily—the forward pass. The Navy secondaries, however, appeared to have no difficulty in spotting the ball and made five interceptions.

Middies Are Too Good.

Navy won because it played the harder and better football, adapting itself to the conditions and cashing in on its tremendous will to win and the greater speed of its backs, particularly the brilliant little Shafer and Lenz.

Maj. Larson and Assistant Rip Miller had bespoken their confidence in their two strong lines, and their forwards vindicated them. They had it all over the loose tackling Army line, and even Capt. Harry Stella was given a bad afternoon by his former Kankakee High school teammate, Capt. Allen Bergner, and the other hard hitting forwards in mustard shirts.

Army gained only eighty-six yards by running and lost thirty-five for a net of fifty-one, as compared with Navy's two hundred seven yards and one hundred eighty-seven net.

Cadet Threat Fails.

Army never got past its 40 yard line in the opening quarter, in which it made one first down to Navy's six. In the second quarter the Cadets just barely crossed midfield by inches, thanks to the good kicking of Jack Hatch.

In the third period Army's attack finally perked up for the first time. Hatch went around Navy's left end for twelve yards from kick formation and then threw a long diagonal pass to Emory Adams for thirty yards and a first down on Navy's 35.

But the cheers of the Cadets were summarily stilled. Big Art Frontczak fumbled for an eight yard loss and then Ed Gillette intercepted Hatch's pass.

Passes Make Yards.

The only other time that Army threatened was on its fifty-six yard march in the final quarter. Two passes, from Heffner to Hanst and from Frawley to Heffner, acounted for forty-seven yards, but, after Frontczak had made a first down at the 19, Frawley faded back to pass again and the ball was knocked from his arm by Bill Montgomery, Navy end. Montgomery recovered on his 37 and that was the end for the Cadets.

Navy's opening assault from its 33 yard line, carrying the ball within field goal range for Leonard, was largely a one man operation. Time after time Lenz took the ball, and Army, in 6-2-2-1 alignment, could not stop him.

Leonard Comes In.

It seemed that Navy was asking too much of one man when the attack finally stalled on the Army 16 yard line, and on fourth down, with five to go, Leonard was called. Whitehead took the pass from center, snapped the ball down on the 25 yard mark. Leonard sent it straight thru.

The third quarter started off with Wolfe recovering Hatch's fumble and Hutson returning the compliment immediately by grabbing Gutting's bobble on Army's 25. From there Army went to Navy's 35 yard line to lose the ball on Gillette's interception, and a minute later Sims made a second interception for Navy on his 46. Then came a great kick by Whitehead to set the stage for Navy's touchdown.

Standing at midfield near the side line, Whitehead kicked out on Army's 2 yard line. Out from the Army bench came Ed Brown, reserve tailback. Brown got off a magnificent punt, sending the ball sixty-three yards in the air. Shafer took it and ran it back to the Army 47, and from there Navy carried it over. A pass from Shafer to Foster netted twelve yards and Shafer, Gutting, and Whitehead carried to the 25 yard line and a first down. Foster picked up three yards and Shafer's pass into the end zone was knocked down as the period ended.

Shafer Goes Across.

The teams changed goals and on the first scrimmage Shafer, in right formation, took the ball from center, knifed inside Army's left tackle, and was away like a shot, outrunning the Army safety to score in the corner.

So two Navy substitute backs, Shafer and Leonard, beat the army today, with the help of some twenty other fighting Navy players.

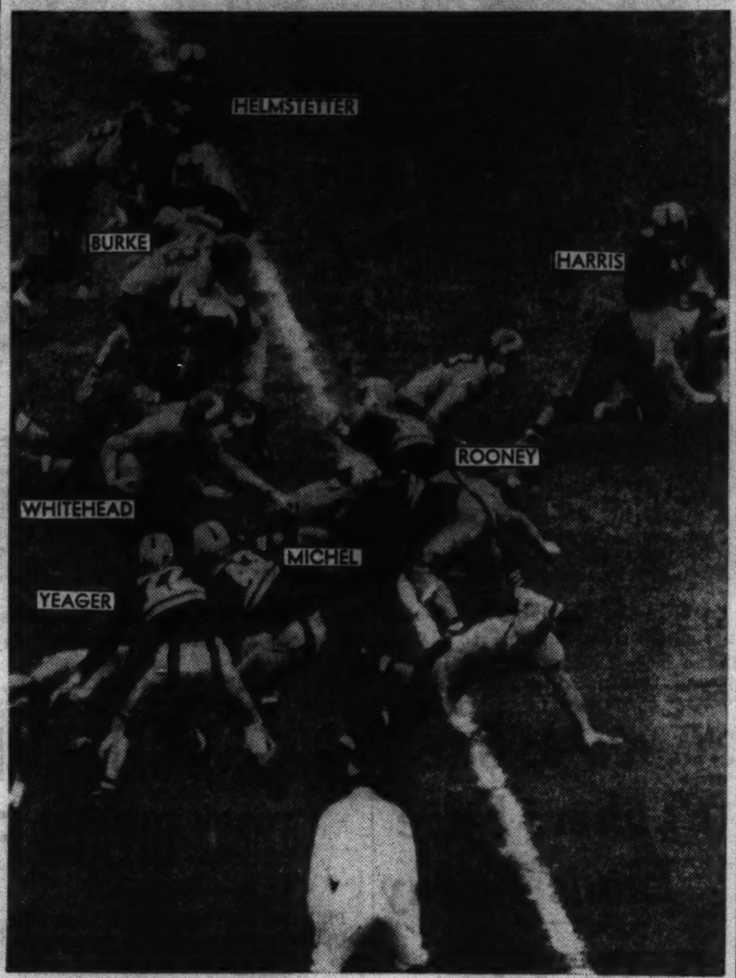
Capt. Bergner, playing his last game, brilliantly led a Navy line that had been strong all year against a rushing attack and that finally today got some real help from a back field that had been all but wrecked by a constant succession of injuries thru the season.

Today's victory wiped out all the heartache and disappointment of the season, and Maj. Larson, ending his first season as head coach at Annapolis, still can say that he has never lost to Army. He was on three winning teams against the Cadets as a midshipman.

Statistics follow:

	Army.	Navy.
First downs	7	8
Yards gained rushing [net]	51	187
Forward passes attempted	13	3
Forward passes completed	8	1
Yards gained by forward passes	73	10
Yards lost [attempt f'rw'd passes]	7	0
Forward passes intercepted by	0	5
Punting aver'ge [from scrimmage]	43	32.5
*Total yards, kicks returned	112	93
Opponents' fumbles recovered	1	2
Yards lost by penalties	20	75

*Includes punts and kickoffs.



It's Whitehead for the Navy again. The Middy back hits line of scrimmage for short gain against Army in first quarter. Navy scored on a 25 yard kick in first quarter by Robert E. Leonard, and made sure of victory on first play of fourth quarter when Dick Shafer went over to climax a forty-seven yard march.

Navy Celebrates, Army Mopes in Dressing Rooms

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 2 (AP).—It was a Navy year, all right, and the Midshipmen celebrated in their dressing room today following their 10 to 0 victory over Army.

Leading figures in the football world, including Coaches Elmer Layden of Notre Dame and Harry Stuhldreher of Wisconsin, crowded into the locker room to shower congratulations on Navy's genial coach, Maj. Emery [Swede] Larson and his players.

"Boy, am I happy," beamed Larson as he shook hand after hand. "I'm so happy I came right up here and had a good cry for myself."

Across the field, Army's dressing room was gloomy and quiet.

"You can't alibi a licking," declared Capt. Bill Wood, Army's coach. "The Navy was in our hair all afternoon. There's not much for me to say. Capt. Harry Stella played a great game."

At this point Maj. Larson hove into view. He grasped Capt. Wood's hand.

"It was a tough game, Bill," he said. "Thanks," replied Wood, "altho there's not much to be thankful for."

President Roosevelt failed to show up, because of the weather. Six hundred seats had been removed to make room for his automobile.

30,000 to See Packers and Lions Clash

capital, meet the Giants, defending champions.

Green Bay came to town fearing the Lions. The time is ripe and circumstances are propitious for an upset. Altho Coach Curley Lambeau found it difficult to get the Packers to think about the Lion game, the players appreciate that they were fortunate to win last week. Scout reports show the Lions gave an excellent exhibition in Washington last week despite their defeat.

Lions Have the Advantage.

Detroit enters the game with all the advantages. It has nothing to gain. Three consecutive defeats have eliminated it from the race. Its attack is better suited to the conditions which will prevail. These conditions also are a boon to the Lions' pass defense. Herber, Isbell, and Hutson are not as dangerous in the mire as they would be on a dry field.

Howard Weiss, former Wisconsin star and full back on the Tribune's All-Star team last summer has been named to start for the Lions. Weiss earned the assignment thru his performance at Washington last week. With him in the lineup the Lions will be more dangerous on wide runs and in the open field. Bill Shepherd will relieve him.

John Pingel, a rookie from Michigan State and also a member of the Tribune's 1939 All-Star team, will start at the important tail back position, altho it is doubtful whether he will be able to pass. Pingel is considered the best runner among the Lions' half backs. The back field will be completed by Lloyd Cardwell at right half, and Fred Vanzo at the blocking position.

Packers in Good Shape.

The loss of Bill Feldhaus is not expected to handicap the Lions a great deal. Bill Radovich, the former Southern California star, has been playing well and Bill Rogers, who was shifted from tackle, is a capable reserve for Radovich. Green Bay has nc cripples, Lambeau reported.

It does not relish playing the Bears, preferring to go from here to Milwaukee, where it hopes to meet the New York Giants in the championship game next week. The Packers already have whipped the Redskins, 27 to 14, and they have the matter of last year's title playoff to settle with the Giants.

Hutson, who has ideas about retiring but will forget the whole thing if the Packers win the league championship and play in the All-Star game next summer, will be at left end. Herber is not listed in the starting lineup, but sometime during the afternoon he will be teamed up with Hutson.

WEBB IS PLACED IN CHARGE OF SOX FARM OPERATIONS

Billy Webb, veteran coach of the White Sox, has been appointed general manager of minor leagues operations by directors of the club, Vice President Harry Grabiner announced last night.

Webb will maintain headquarters in Chicago but will be in active charge of all relations with minor league farms and other clubs with which the White Sox nave working agreements. The club's farm system includes teams in Lubbock of the West Texas league, Longview of the East Texas league and Rayne [La.] of the Evangeline league.

GIANTS TO MEET REDSKINS TODAY BEFORE 60,000

New York, Dec. 2 [Special].—The Polo Grounds will be jammed tomorrow when upward of 60,000 turn out to see the climactic clash of the National Football league's eastern division campaign—the New York Giants vs. the Washington Redskins for the division championship.

The Giants and Redskins come to the struggle with identical records of eight victories, one defeat and one deadlock. In their one previous meeting this season the champions and the Redskins fought to a scoreless tie in Washington with muddy underfooting slowing down both teams.

Redskins Are Favorites.

The Redskins, with Andy Farkas, Frank Filchock, Sammy Baugh and Dick Todd leading the attack, rule 3 to 2 favorites to win and qualify for the title playoff, tentatively scheduled for Milwaukee next Sunday. To insure the Milwaukee game the Green Bay Packers must defeat or tie the Lions in Detroit tomorrow, and the Giants and Redskins must reach a decision.

Leemans to Play.

The Redskins were 6 to 5 over the Giants a few days ago, but the titleholders dropped in the odds when it became known that Tuffy Leemans, their ace back, was being treated for a leg infection. The leg is still a bit tender, but Tuffy expects to do full time duty.

The Giant-Redskin rivalry has become a headline attraction since 1937. That year, with the eastern crown at stake, Washington whipped New York, 49 to 14, as Cliff Battles ran wild and went ahead to conquer the Bears for the championship. But the Giants reversed the procedure last year, crushing the Redskins, 30 to 0, for division laurels and polishing off Green Bay in the playoff.

TROSKY MAY GO INTO CLEVELAND OUTFIELD IN 1940

Cleveland, O., Dec. 2 (AP).—Hal Trosky, veteran Cleveland first baseman, may be in right field when the 1940 season opens. Manager Oscar Vitt, stopping off here on his way to the winter baseball meetings in Cincinnati, said Trosky had agreed to the shift.

"Hal has told me that he'll play anywhere I want him to if I think it will help the ball club," the Indians' pilot declared last night.

The Trosky move will depend on developments at the Tribe's most consistent trouble spot — second base. Vitt said he now figured Oscar Grimes for third, with Lou Boudreau, sensational rookie, at shortstop. Should Ray Mack start hitting, however, Grimes may be moved to first and Trosky sent into the outer defense.

Mack, a good fielder, teamed with Boudreau at Buffalo most of last season and Vitt is anxious to give him plenty of chance to hit his batting stride this spring.

Vitt said he would gladly swap Catchers Rollie Hemsley or Frankie Pytlak if he could get what he wants—a right handed hitting outfielder.

Wheaton Beaten, 4 to 2, in Its Soccer Finale

Westminster, Md., Dec. 2 [Special].—The Wheaton college soccer team closed its season and eastern invasion today by losing to Western Maryland, 4 to 2, in a match played in the mud.

Stanford Gets First Victory in 14-3 Upset

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Pushed around all season and for two quarters of its final game today, the Stanford university football team marched sixty-six yards for a third period touchdown which paved the way for a 14 to 3 victory over Dartmouth.

Unable to win in eight previous starts, the westerners appeared well on the road to perpetuating their record as Dartmouth, registering a field goal the first time it got the ball, shoved its opponent up and down the field and thwarted every offensive thrust.

The 10,603 fans who watched the fog-veiled battle in the Polo Grounds had no reason to believe that Dartmouth would be defeated as the teams left the field at the half. Never had Stanford been in Dartmouth territory and twice it was forced to dig in to repel thrusts from its 5 yard line.

Hutchinson Kicks Field Goal.

Bill Hutchinson had dropped back to the Stanford 20 yard line to boot a field goal early in the first quarter, giving the Big Green a 3 to 0 lead.

Midway in the third quarter the Stanford offense came to life. Dale Bartholomew had fumbled and Stan Graff had recovered for Stanford on the Stanford 34. The westerners then loosed a brilliant running and passing attack. Norman Standlee started the march with a first down in two plunges. He then completed a pass to Andy Stojkovich, took one himself from Frank Albert, and saw Albert complete another to Hugh Gallarneau on the Dartmouth 15.

Albert Scores Twice.

Standlee then took over himself with a series of driving plays which carried to the 3, from where Albert sliced thru his left tackle for a touchdown. Albert also kicked the extra point.

With the advantage finally on their side, the Indians dug in to check thrust after thrust of the Dartmouth team, which finally threw caution to the winds. Jim Bauman's pass from near his own goal late in the final period was intercepted by Carl Warnecke, Stanford tackle, who was downed on the Dartmouth 8. On the next play Albert swept around his right end for a touchdown. He again place kicked the goal to end the day's scoring. Lineups:

Feller Signs; Gets Highest Cleveland Pay

Cleveland, O., Dec. 2 (AP).—Bob Feller, 21 year old strikeout king of the major leagues, tonight signed a contract for 1940 with the Cleveland Indians. Terms of the contract were not revealed, but the Indians' vice president, C. C. Slapnicka, said Feller would be paid the largest salary ever given a Cleveland pitcher.

The contract signing followed a one hour conference between the young pitcher, President Alva Bradley, and Slapnicka, after Feller came here to attend a high school father and son banquet.

Cleveland sports writers estimated Feller, who led American league pitchers with 24 victories last season, would receive $23,000 in 1940, about $3,000 more than he was paid last year under a contract providing a bonus. Slapnicka refused to say whether the new contract contained a bonus clause.

Reluctant to discuss his prospects for 1940, Feller advised against "going for any of that 30 game talk."

MAKE RICHARDS MIDGET AUTO RACE FAVORITE

Ray Richards, Chicago driver, will be the favorite in the auto races tonight in the 124th Field Artillery armory, 5200 Cottage Grove avenue. Duke Nalon of Chicago and Harry MacQuinn of Indianapolis are expected to battle him all the way. The first race will start at 8:30 o'clock, following 90 minutes of time trials.

Nalon and MacQuinn are fighting for the point standing lead, with the former leading 223 to 206. Richards is in third place with 130 points. Richards, however, last week took the lead from MacQuinn in the main event and stayed in front to win. MacQuinn was second and Nalon was third.

Wally Zale, Tony Willman, Ted Duncan, and Bob Muhlke also are contenders tonight. Zale is one of the most skilled drivers to compete on the armory oval. Willman won several armory features last season.

The field also will include Cowboy O'Rourke, Art Hartsfeld, Ted Tetterton, Tony Bettenhausen, Mike O'Halloran, Warren Erwin, Pete Nielson, A. Sprang, and Bill Smith.

After the time trials the drivers will compete in four elimination races, a handicap for the eight fastest cars, two consolation races, and the 40 lap main event.

TULANE ELEVEN'S COUNTERRALLIES SINK L. S. U., 33-20

Fourth Period Drive Wins Thrilling Duel.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 2 (U. P.).—Tulane scored twice in the last period today to defeat its traditional rival, Louisiana State University, 33 to 20, in a sensational and bitter battle. A gathering of 42,000 watched the 50th contest of a gridiron feud that began in 1893.

Led by Ashford Simes, a substitute half back, L. S. U. scored a touchdown in each of the first three periods. Tulane matched the scoring in each of the first three periods, twice coming from behind, and then drove over the winning points in the last quarter.

Give and Take.

The Tigers put over their first touchdown in the first seven minutes of play, recovering a blocked punt on the Tulane 1 yard line and Full Back Roy Joe going over. Five minutes later Tulane went ahead as Full Back Fred Gloden plunged over from the 1 foot line to climax a drive and Half Back Bob [Jitterbug] Kellogg kicked the point.

L. S. U. came back strong, and early in the second period Simes raced sixty-two yards for a touchdown. Anderson converted. Tulane turned to its little used passing attack to even the score four minutes before the half ended, Kellog tossing a twenty yard pass to Capt. Paul Krueger. The point was missed and the half ended 13 to 13.

In the opening minutes of the third period Kellogg threw a forty yard pass to End Ralph Wenzel, who ran across the goal line but told the referee he had stepped out on the 1 yard stripe. Gloden took it over, but the play was called back because Tulane was off side and the Green Wave was penalized five yards. Kellogg then scored the touchdown from the 6 yard line and converted.

L. S. U. Ties It Up.

Simes threw Charley Anastasio a forty-eight yard pass a few minutes later for L. S. U.'s third and last touchdown. Anderson's kick for the extra point was good and they went into the fourth period deadlocked, 20 to 20.

Toward the middle of the final period Tulane's Bob Glass went over right tackle and ran eighty-five yards to L. S. U.'s 1 yard line. Half Back Monette Butler went over and Glass converted. Tulane put over its last touchdown three minutes before the game ended, Glass going thru center from the 3 yard line to climax a march. The lineups:

S. M. U., 14; T. C. U., 7

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 2 (AP).—Sophomore Presto Johnston made a couple of stunning touchdown runs today, runs badly needed for Southern Methodist to beat down Texas Christian, 14 to 7.

First he sprinted seventy-three yards with an intercepted pass. Then he ran twenty-one yards in the fourth period for the winning touchdown.

Three more times Southern Methodist moved down near the T. C. U. goal, but failed to score.

The Methodists piled up 227 yards on the ground and 131 more in the air for a net of 358 yards.

For Texas Christian it was all Kyle Gillespie — also a sophomore. He stunned the Methodists once with a fifty-eight yard aerial blast for the T. C. U. touchdown that left the score tied, 7 to 7, at half time, and engineered the pass attack that accumulated 186 yards. But Christian's running game netted only forty-eight yards.

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 2 [Special].—The Toronto Maple Leafs remained atop the National Hockey league standing as they came from behind to earn a 3 to 3 overtime tie with the Chicago Blackhawks here tonight. The Leafs went into the third period trailing by three goals.

A crowd of 11,138 fans saw the Leafs earn their first point in the last three starts. The leaders dropped two games on the road, being victims of the New York Americans and Boston Bruins.

Meet Again Tonight.

It was the first meeting of the Hawks and Maple Leafs this season. The teams return to Chicago to resume hostilities tomorrow night.

After spotting the Hawks three goals, the Leafs put on a spectacular rally. Gordon Drillon put them on the score sheet after five minutes of play and in the final 10 minutes they pounded continuously. The power plays finally clicked as they scored two goals in 11 seconds. Syl Apps got the first and Bob Davidson accounted for the tying goal on a long, low shot.

After four minutes of the first period during which neither team came close to scoring, Lex Chisholm was chased for holding and the Hawks put on a power play. It was successful, Desilets beating Broda from the right side of the Toronto net, after taking a pass from Dahlstrom.

March Rifles in Second.

The Hawks continued to press but Chisholm returned before any more damage was done. With the teams both at full strength March put the Chicago team two goals up at 9:21. He spanked home a passout from behind the Leaf net, after Wiebe had carried the puck the length of the ice.

The Hawks scored their final goal when Carse and Allen broke away from a Toronto five man attack in the second period. Carse passed to Allen, who scored at 14:53.

Minnesota held a narrow margin of 29 to 16 at half time.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—New York's two National Hockey league teams—the Rangers and the Americans—divided the points in a fast and exciting match tonight playing 10 minutes overtime to a 1 to 1 tie.

The Rangers' point was sufficient to give them sole possession of second place, a point back of the league-leading Toronto Maple Leafs. The Americans crept up a notch on the seventh place Boston Bruins.

The two goals came within a minute of each other in the third period.

Kilby MacDonald, young wingman, scored his first major league goal for the Rangers, beating Earl Robertson all the way on a 12 foot drive after Neil Colville and Ott Heller eased him thru the defense.

The Americans struck back quickly and tied the score. Veteran Hooley Smith, playing center and defense for the short handed Dutton team, scored, sliding the puck under Davie Kerr as the goalie dived. Eddie Wiseman and Charlie Conacher got assists.

RIGGS WINS IN FIRST ROUND OF INDOOR TENNIS

Top seeded players in the western indoor tennis tournament in the 108th Engineers armory won their opening round matches last night.

Bobby Riggs of the Chicago Town and Tennis club, top ranking amateur in the United States, seeded No. 1 in the current meet, defeated William Fleischman of Montclair, N. J., 6-2, 6-2.

At the start of the fourth quarter, Andretich, Meakim, and David plunged and sprinted to a first down on Fenger's 27 yard line. Meakim then missed another first down by inches on the first play of the next series and Andretich made it first down on Fenger's 15.

One Score, Then Another.

Meakim, a bundle of fury by now, ripped and plunged for a first down on the 2 yard line. Then he went over for the touchdown. Dwyer's attempted conversion from placement failed.

On the second play after the next kickoff Mount Carmel got the ball after Stevenson had made a quick kick out of bounds on Mount Carmel's 30. David then made it first down on his 43 yard line. A run by Andretich and a pass, Andretich to David, gave Mount Carmel a first down on the Fenger 43. The next three plays netted only five yards, after which David kicked out of bounds on Fenger's 8 yard line.

Stevenson kicked out to his 39 yard line, then Mount Carmel went to work, gaining great impetus after several Andretich gains when a pass from Meakim to Dwyer was good for twenty-two yards to the Fenger 11 yard line. Andretich made one and Meakim plunged to the 5. Fenger was off side on the next play and the ball was put on the 1 yard line.

The first play in the new series of downs lost a yard, but David got it back on one play then went over his right tackle for a touchdown. Dwyer, on the spot, added the point to tie the score. The game ended three plays later.

Fenger Rushes for 119 Yards.

Mount Carmel compiled nine first downs to Fenger's eight, but the public school champions gained 119 yards to the Catholic leaguers' 77.

Mount Carmel held an edge in passing, completing three out of four for seventeen yards, while Fenger was successful in six out of 10 pass attempts for eighty-three yards.

The individual figures showed Griffin gained sixty-five yards in eighteen attempts, while Andretich went thirty-nine on seventeen. Florek carried the ball eleven times and gained forty-three yards, while Meakim picked up forty-five yards in thirteen attempts.

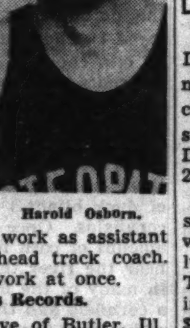
HAROLD OSBORN TO HELP COACH ILLINOIS TRACK

Champaign, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—Dr. Harold M. Osborn, one of the most famous jumpers and all-around athletes in the history of track athletics, will become assistant track coach at the University of Illinois, Director Wendell S. Wilson announced today.



Harold Osborn.

Osborn, a graduate of Illinois in 1922, recently returned to Champaign to practice his profession of osteopathy, which he will continue but will give part of each day to his work as assistant to L. T. Johnson head track coach. He will begin his work at once.

Six World's Records.

Osborn is a native of Butler, Ill., and a graduate of Hillsboro High school. He held six world's records, two Olympic championships, seven United States championships, one British, one Canadian title and other European championships. His standing high jump of 5 feet 6 inches indoors, made in St. Louis in 1935, still stands. Osborn's world record in the high jump, 6 feet 8¼ inches, was established on Illinois field, May 27, 1924, during a tryout for the American Olympic team. This record stood for nine years.

He Still Competes.

Osborn's competition has extended from his high school days in Hillsboro in 1916 until the present, for he competed in a Labor day meet in Cincinnati and cleared 6 feet. Even today, at the age of 40, Osborn, with a little practice, can probably clear 6 feet 2 or 3 inches.

The all-around star made three trips to Europe, in 1924 and 1928 for the Olympics and in 1925, when he competed in 22 meets in 42 days, won 29 first, 9 seconds, and 11 thirds and scored 183 points.

Detroit Beats Evanston, 9-8, in Indoor Polo

Jay Secor's goal in overtime gave the Detroit Rangers a 9 to 8 victory over the Evanston Polo club last night in the Metropolitan Polo league senior division game at the 124th Field Artillery armory.

Two goals by Bobby Nichoalds overcame a Detroit lead late in the fourth period, his second placing Evanston ahead, 8 to 7.

Up to that time, Volney Bayley's seven points had been sole scoring for Detroit. Secor then came through with his first of the game to force the battle into a sudden death extra session.

Polo's only all-brother team, the Ranchers, composed of Jim, Tom, and Mike Healy, went into a tie with the 122d Field Artillery for first place in the junior division by defeating the Woodland Polo club, 13 to 4, in the opening game.

The teams played on even terms during the first half, but the Ranchers forged ahead in the third period after Claude Mackey had given Woodland a 4 to 3 lead.

MOUNT CARMEL LAUGHS, CRIES IN LOCKER ROOM

Fenger Gives 'Em Credit for 2d Half Rally.

BY JAMES SEGRETI.

Mount Carmel's dressing room under the east stands of Soldiers' field yesterday was the scene of a big celebration. The Catholic league champions had tied Fenger, 13 to 13, in the sixth annual all-city title game, but judging by the noise you'd think Mount Carmel had won by an overwhelming score.

Eugene Dwyer, Mount Carmel's star left end, cried unrestrainedly as he was embraced by his father. Johnny Andretich dashed around congratulating all his regular teammates who had played without substitution. Sigmund Czarobski, junior left tackle, lay on a rubbing table.

Andretich Praises Teammates.

Three policemen were needed to keep well wishers from the room. Officials of the Catholic league, coaches and other supporters jammed around the entrance attempting to get in and congratulate the players who had halted Fenger's 22 game winning streak.

"Fenger was about as tough as Catholic High of Joliet," said Andretich thru puffed lips. "We had a couple of bad breaks, but when we began to settle down we knew we had a good chance to win. Czarobski, Meakim, David, and Tom Creevy were great."

From the shower room came shouts of "We're the champs." Wally Fromhart, Mount Carmel head coach, and Fred Mundee, his assistant, were sought out by the Rev. Paschal Baier, Mount Carmel athletic director, and Andy Pilney, coach of Weber High's eleven.

Fenger Gives 'Em Credit.

There was quiet in the Fenger clubhouse on the west side of the field. Several players joined in a chorus of "Down by the Old Mill Stream." Charles Palmer, Fenger coach, stood in a corner chatting with A. H. Pritzlaff, physical education director of the Public School league, who had just returned from the Mount Carmel dressing room where he delivered the ball used in the game to Fromhart.

Palmer said Henry Stevenson's quick kick in the fourth quarter on first down gave Mount Carmel the opportunity to march for its second touchdown. He said the team should have held onto the ball, but added:

"After all, they are just kids. I guess it would have been a great play if the kick had rolled out of bounds on the Mount Carmel 5 yard line, but instead it gave Mount Carmel a break."

Griffin Praises Foes.

Donald [Flash] Griffin, Fenger's 17 year old senior quarter back, who last year led the South Siders to a 13 to 0 victory over Mount Carmel, said the Catholic league champions were greater than in 1938.

"Those guys certainly were keyed up in the second half," said Griffin. "Johnny Andretich and Frankie Meakim are two of the best players we met this season. I guess Stevenson's kick in the fourth quarter gave Mount Carmel a break, but you can always expect something like that in a football game. I hope those Mount Carmel fellows show up at our party tonight."

FIVE LETTER MEN RETURN AT N. U. FOR BASKETBALL

Wildcats Open Tuesday Against Carleton.

Week's Games

MONDAY.
Carleton at Wisconsin.
Notre Dame at Valparaiso.
Iowa State at Morningside.
Kalamazoo at Michigan State.

TUESDAY.
Carleton at Northwestern.

WEDNESDAY.
Wabash at Illinois.
Chicago Teachers at Chicago.
Cincinnati at Notre Dame.
Arkansas State at Loyola.

THURSDAY.
Western State [Mich.] at Purdue.
Otterbein at Ohio State.

FRIDAY.

Grinnell at Iowa State.
Arkansas State at De Paul.

SATURDAY.
Wabash at Indiana.
Michigan State at Michigan.
Marquette at Wisconsin.
South Dakota State at Minnesota.
North Central at Chicago.
Alumni at Loyola.

Five lettermen and a small, but promising group of sophomores will form the nucleus for Northwestern university's basketball team which opens its 20 game schedule against Carleton college in Patten gymnasium Tuesday night.

The Wildcats will play five practice games before opening their Big Ten season against Purdue Jan. 6. In addition to Carleton, the pre-conference opponents are Washington State, a strong contender for the Pacific coast title; Pittsburgh, one of the ranking eastern teams; Princeton, a newcomer on the Wildcat schedule, and Notre Dame, a rival of long standing.

Three Regulars Missing.

Coach Dutch Lonborg, starting his 13th season at Northwestern, must replace three regulars from last year's team who were lost by graduation. Bob Koble, center, and the team's leading scorer; Bob Voigts, all-conference guard, and Jim Currie, guard, were the principal graduation losses.

Last year's team finished sixth in the conference race with five victories and six defeats. Lack of a scoring punch was largely responsible for the loss of a number of close games. The fact that Koble, one of the Big Ten's leading shooters, has been graduated makes the offensive strength of this year's team all the more questionable. Koble's successor must be picked from incoming sophomores since no veteran centers remain. Don Clawson, football full back, is a leading candidate. The husky 220 pound, 6 foot 3 inch youngster lacks experience but his height may prove valuable on a team which is smaller than average. Sam Gershuny, 6 foot 6 inch sophomore, is another pivot candidate.

Regular Forwards Return.

Al Butherus and Chuck Melchoir, last year's regular forwards, return to give the team a pair of fast, accurate ball handlers in the front line. Les Harman, a reserve last year, needs only a better shooting eye to move him into a starting position.

Loss of Bob Voigts, last year's captain and guard, will be a blow to the team's defense unless several sophomores develop. Capt. Ad Vance, a regular guard for two years and one of the best back court players in the conference will hold down one of the positions.

Bob Shepard, a letterman, who saw considerable action last year as a sophomore, may take over Voigts' position. Leading candidate among the new men is Dick Klein, 195 pound, 6 foot 2 inch guard from Fort Madison, Ia. He is a splendid ball handler and an accurate long range shooter.

Boston Whips Holy Cross in Mud, 14-0

Boston, Mass., Dec. 2 (AP).—Boston college overpowered Holy Cross, 14 to 0, in their annual battle today in a murky drizzle before a packed crowd of 40,000 in Fenway park. It was Boston college's 18th victory, against 15 defeats and three ties, in the long series that started in 1896, and enabled the Eagles to close their season with only one defeat—a 7 to 0 loss to Florida early in the season. Holy Cross' only previous defeat was by Louisiana State in the second game of the season.

The Eagles failed to score until the first play of the final period, when Pete Cignetti smashed inside right tackle from the 3 yard line to put a touchdown finish to a fifty-two yard march. A short time later, End Gene Goodreault and Capt. Ernie Schwotzer blocked one of Ronnie Cahill's punts on the 15 yard line and the B. C. leader fell on it in the Holy Cross end zone for the second touchdown.

There was just enough dampness to slow down Holy Cross' speedy ball carriers with the result that the Worcester collegians were penned inside their own territory all the first half and were limited to two feeble scoring threats in the third and final periods.

Boston college supporters were so delirious they ripped down both goal posts before the game ended. They regarded the victory as the clincher for one of the post-season bowl invitations. Lineup:

FORDHAM, 18; N. Y. U., 7

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—There was an explosion in the second half of the annual football Battle of the Bronx at Yankee stadium today. It was Fordham's power coming to life. And when the pieces were all put together again in the rain and the fog, there was Fordham with an 18 to 7 victory over New York university in the 50th anniversary clash of these neighborhood rivals. A crowd of 57,000 saw the game.

The game marked the end of the collegiate careers of two of the greatest local backs in years, Ed Boell, N. Y. U.'s triple-threater, and Don Principe, driving powerhouse of the Rams. Boell was the mainstay of the Violets today, passing for their lone touchdown in the second period, and Principe piled over for two of the Rams' touchdowns. Jim Blumenstock ran thirty-nine yards for the other touchdown.

COLORADO MINES PLAYER BREAKS SCORING MARK

Denver, Colo., Dec. 2 (AP).—Lloyd Madden, the nation's leading football scorer, and the Colorado Mines team closed the season today by defeating Regis college, 38 to 6.

Madden raced for four touchdowns, one on a ninety yard return of an intercepted pass. It was the eighth straight victory for the undefeated and untied Miners.

Madden put the national scoring title beyond challenge by increasing his season's total to 141 points. He broke the Rock Mountain conference scoring record—122 points—set by Whizzer White of Colorado two years ago.

Play Handball Finals Today in Midwest Meet

Joe Platak, 29 years old Chicago Lithuanian who has won five national handball singles championships, is showing no signs of relinquishing the title. Platak, an auditor for a hotel company when he is not competing on courts thruout the country, has convinced Chicago handball enthusiasts that he intends to remain on top of the nation's leading players for several years.

Joe Platak.

Platak, perennial Central Amateur Athletic union singles title holder, began a drive with Herb Jensen last week for the doubles title in the Midwest Athletic club. The pair had no trouble advancing to the final round, which will be played this afternoon.

Platak and Jensen will be opposed by Dick Martin and Bob Weller, who yesterday defeated Lieut. Bob Quinn and John Stenson, 21-20, 21-16. Platak and Jensen eliminated George DiRe and Paddy Cannon, 21-14, 21-8, in their semi-final match.

Announce Letter Winners.

Names of monogram winners for 1939 will be announced for the first time at the dinner, and the players will be presented with their sweaters. The captain-elect for 1940 also will be announced at the dinner. Players named to various mythical teams will receive their awards at the banquet.

A picked group from the Notre Dame band, under the direction of Prof. Joseph J. Casasanta, will furnish the music.

Detroit Holds Duquesne to 10 to 10 Tie

Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 2 (AP).—The unerring aim of John Rokisky, a 190 pound sophomore from Clarksburg, Wa. Va., and his detachable rubber toe today preserved Duquesne university's unbeaten record as the Dukes deadlocked Detroit's Titans, 10 to 10, to climax their most successful football season. A crowd of 23,691 saw the game.

With Duquesne's hopes for a Bowl bid resting on the kick, Rokisky snapped on the attachment and sent the ball soaring from the soupy field in the fourth period for the tying point. The placement brought Rokisky's record for the season to 12 out of 13.

The Dukes, untied before today in a nine game schedule, came from behind, as usual. As in the Pitt and Marquette games—when they spotted their favored adversaries 13 points each—the Duquesne players saw the Titans gain an early advantage.

Fumble Helps Detroit.

A fumble in the first period by Phil Ahwesh started Detroit rolling. Pavelec recovered on the Detroit 41 and the Titans marched to a touchdown, Ghesquiere going over from the 3. Hayes converted from placement and only a few minutes later kicked a field goal from the Duquesne 20.

That ended the Detroit scoring, but the Duquesne offense bogged down as heavy rain fell and it became so dark for a time that the players were indistinguishable from the stands.

Rokisky first snapped on his detachable kicking toe in the second period after Duquesne had marched from its own 5 yard line to the Detroit 13, where the Titans stiffened. The sophomore dropped back to the 20 yard line and recorded Duquesne's first three points from placement.

Score on Long Run.

As the third period went scoreless, the outlook for Duquesne seemed as dark as the sky, but in the final period George Gonda, a sophomore half back from nearby Redstone township, suddenly broke loose on an off tackle play and dashed fifty-four yards for a touchdown. It was then Rokisky snapped on his toe for the last time and tied the score.

Opening with a rush, St. Louis took a 10 point lead in the opening period, but the heavier Washington eleven rolled ahead with two touchdowns in the second quarter. They fought it out on even terms with a touchdown apiece in the second half.

Illinois Duck Hunting Season Ends Tuesday

BY BOB BECKER.

In just a couple of days waterfowl hunters in the central or intermediate zone will mark finis to the 1939 duck and goose hunting season. Since Illinois is placed in the intermediate zone the Illinois river, a favorite rendezvous of mallards and pintails, soon will be quiet. The last shooting day of the 1939 waterfowl season is Tuesday. If Illinois and other hunters want to sit in a blind after Tuesday they'll have to hustle down to Arkansas or to other states in the southern zone where waterfowl hunting is permitted until after Christmas.

One of the finest and closest locations for waterfowl hunting in the southern zone is the country around Stuttgart, Dewitt, and Otwell, Ark. This is the rice growing country where there now are millions of mallards.

In Illinois the season will close Tuesday with more moans than cheers emanating from the Illinois river valley. There have been some places in the bottomlands where hunters enjoyed excellent shooting. But as far as our checkup of the valley goes, the spots that produced topnotch mallard and pintail hunting were much in the minority. After the first few days of the open season the smart ducks left many of the marshes where there was natural food [plus plenty of duck blinds!] and headed for the cornfields. Once they learned of the amount of corn left in the cornfields near the river they spent little time in many of the big marshes. Out of a cornfield and then back to a refuge—that was the duck schedule which outwitted thousands of hunters.

After visiting a number of sloughs this fall, checking on the hunting in many others, and watching the flights from the cornfields to the preserves we're convinced that Illinois had a magnificent flight of birds this fall. On Thanksgiving morning we saw hundreds of thousands of birds coming out of the cornfields on their way to the river.

There is no doubt the Illinois river had an abundance of ducks this fall, thanks to the splendid work of Ducks Unlimited in Canada, the organization which is working to establish breeding grounds for the nesting waterfowl. And there also is no doubt that the mechanical corn pickers and their trails of wasted grain in the fields upset the shooting schedule on the river by changing the habits of the ducks.

DENIES MOVE TO HAVE ILLINOIS FIRE W. S. WILSON

Springfield, Ill., Dec. 2 (AP).—Don Seaton, former University of Illinois track coach, said today that he and Don Karnes, former Illini basketball star, had asked their close alumni friends to consider Fred [Brick] Young, Bloomington sports editor and official, as "a possible candidate" for athletic directorship of the university.

"We wrote a few letters to personal friends calling their attention to Young's qualifications," Seaton said. "However, we had no intention of starting any movement that might affect the tenure of Wendell S. Wilson, who is now director."

Seaton said he and Karnes acted as alumni interested in the welfare of the university. He said that rumors have been circulating that a change was under consideration, and "we merely do not want to be caught napping if there should be a change."

"We both believe that 'Brick' Young has the qualifications to do an excellent job with the school's athletic affairs and that his name should be mentioned if there is any change," he added.

BRUINS GIVE PRO BASKETBALL NEW START THIS WEEK

Chicago to Open Against Oshkosh Wednesday.

This Week's Games

Tuesday—Akron Goodyears at Detroit.
Wednesday—Oshkosh at Chicago; Akron Firestones at Indianapolis.
Thursday—Firestones at Sheboygan.
Saturday—Detroit at Akron, O., Goodyears; Firestones at Oshkosh.
Sunday—Firestones at Hammond, Ind.

BY CHARLES BARTLETT.

Professional basketball, absent from Chicago as an organized sport since 1930, will return to our town Wednesday night when the Chicago Bruins meet the Oshkosh All-Stars in their first National Basketball league battle in the 132d Regiment armory, Madison and Rockwell streets.

These 1939-'40 Bruins won't be quite the same as their predecessors, the Bruins of 1930. There won't be any Nat Hickeys, Davy Bankses, or Nat Holmans. But there will be a couple of lads who stood local customers on their heads as recently as last spring, in the course of collegiate endeavors for Loyola university.

Novak, Kautz to Play.

Long Mike Novak and little Wibs Kautz are the former Loyolans who are expected to shoot a basket or two for the Bruins in the course of a 28-game schedule which will not end until March 6, after they have played the other seven members of the league two games at home and two on the road. Novak, whose 6 feet 9 inches made him especially valuable to Loyola on a defensive basis, is expected to be the regular center. Kautz, who made 341 points for the Ramblers last year and who had a three year aggregate of 817 points, will be one of the forwards, the other being Willie Phillips, former De Paul star. Frank Linskey, another De Paul light, and Eddie Oram, 6 foot 3 inch ex-University of Southern California captain, will be the guards.

Sam Lifschultz, who had his greatest success at Crane Tech, where he developed Joe Reiff and Bob Gruenig, will coach the squad, which will be augmented by Marv Colen, former Loyola captain; Tony Carp, formerly of the La Salle Hotel Cavaliers; George Hogan, a Loyola teammate of Kautz and Novak; and Elmer Johnson and Bernie Davis, late of Northwestern.

Owned by Halas, Bidwill.

The Bruins, who will be operated by George Halas of the Chicago Bears and Charles Bidwill of the Chicago Cardinals, will open with four consecutive home games, concluding with Christmas night. Following these, they will go on a four game road trip to Detroit, Indianapolis, and Akron, O., returning here Jan. 3.

The National Basketball league is composed of two four-team divisions. The western division consists of the Bruins, Hammond, Ind., Sheboygan, Wis., and Oshkosh, Wis., while the eastern section includes Detroit, Indianapolis, the Akron Firestones and the Akron Goodyears. Winners of the two divisional races meet for the title after the regular schedule.

Akron Wins '38 Title.

Last year, the Akron Firestones defeated Oshkosh for the championship. The Bruins and Detroit are the new members of the league, supplanting Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

League games will be conducted under college rules, with the exception of the five-foul expulsion law.

Georgia Tech Marches Thru Georgia, 13-0

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 2 (AP).—In a bruising combat that ran true to the form of this ancient gridiron rivalry, Georgia Tech's Engineers made two powerful thrusts today to defeat Georgia's Bulldogs, 13 to 0, before a homecoming crowd of 30,000. The victory gave the Engineers a clean sweep of their six southeastern conference games and a claim to a share of the 1939 championship.

In twice driving forty yards for touchdowns and throwing up a defense that halted two Georgia drives inside the 20 yard line in the first period Georgia Tech overcame a jinx that had trailed it for the last three years.

CAPACITY CROWD ATTENDS OPENING OF HORSE SHOW

Illinois Exhibitors Have Program to Selves.

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Horses owned by Illinois exhibitors joined forces with an expert sheep dog, some spectacular wild west stunt riders, teams of gigantic draft animals, an entire herd of blue ribbon cattle, and an amazingly adroit sheep shearer to provide a capacity crowd with an evening of entertainment and excitement as the International Live Stock exposition's horse show opened last night.

For hours the International amphitheater's show ring was the scene of brilliant exhibitions by three-gaited saddle horses, five-gaited saddle horses, harness horses, stockyards horses, hunting horses, and nearly every other variety of horse that has ever been lured into a bridle.

The spectators got one of their most impressive moments when the entire ring was filled with rank on rank of mighty Shires, Clydesdales and Percherons, tugging at their halters and tossing their heads while the bands played.

Chicago Woman Wins First.

To Miss Jula McGuire of Chicago went the honor of winning the first prize of this show, which annually brings out the best horses of the country. Her 6 year old chestnut gelding, Royal Fancy, went cantering out of the ring with a blue ribbon attached to his bridle after the judges had delivered their verdict on a group of three-gaited saddle horses.

Sheep Dog Shows 'Em.

Then the serious business stopped for a while and the crowd was entertained with an exhibition of sheep herding by a dog named Jean. The dog and the sheep were meeting for the first time, but any one would have thought they had been working together in a vaudeville act for years. Sometimes he bullied them, sometimes he stalked them menacingly, sometimes he scared them with furious rushes—and his tactics were so effective that he marshaled them from a truck to a pen and back into the truck again without the loss of a single sheep. All the act lacked was a wolf.

Then out came some stockyards horses to show how the daily work is done. They responded to every touch of the reins as their riders guided them up to closed gates which had to be opened and shut again without the riders dismounting.

Then came wild west stunts and other amusing acts that filled every moment until the evening's program was concluded with a competition for hunters. There will be two performances today—one beginning at 2 p. m. and another at 7:30.

War Dog, Long Shot, Wins Last Bowie Feature

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 2 [Special].—The eastern racing season came to an end at Bowie today. Despite mud, rain, and fog a new stake record was set by Harry Guggenheim's War Dog before 12,000 in the T. K. Lynch Memorial. The 3 year old son of Bull Dog and Flying Shot led from start to finish to be timed in 1:47 2-5, the fastest time in the five runnings of the event.

A blanket of flowers, the gift of turf writers, was draped over the brown colt after he had finished the mile and a sixteenth under the handling of Jockey Emanuel Berg. The lad gained a new pair of boots.

War Dog Pays $21.90.

War Dog was an outsider and returned $21.90 for $2, being the thirteenth consecutive losing choice. Heavily backed for the $6,250 prize was W. L. Brann's Challephen, the favorite. After interference at the first turn Challephen gained steadily to be a fast going second, six lengths back of the winner, and a half length in front of Wise Lady. The winner's share of the purse was $4,500.

There was little to the race once Jockey Berg got away flying. Sam Renick endeavored to get Great Union to the front, but his best efforts were not enough. War Dog had more than enough early foot to handle Great Union. Renick quickly ran his mount into the ground, this taking place when the far turn was reached, and Great Union thereafter dropped out of contention.

Challephen Works Way Up.

War Dog went along more smoothly than ever, and Berg had little to do but sit still. Challephen all this while was working his way up thru the field, and while he was a fast going second he had no chance of overtaking the leader. Wise Lady ran a steady race, getting up for third money after Bala Ormont had been a contender for most of the way.

Sparta Battles Manhattans in Cup Soccer

BY OFFSIDE.

The Manhattan Brewers and the Sparta A. B. A., two of the leading professional soccer teams in the middle west, will meet this afternoon in a second round match in the national soccer cup tournament in Sparta stadium, 21st street and Kostner avenue. Another cup battle will bring together the Swedish-Americans and the Milwaukee Hungarians in Winnemac park.

The winner of the Manhattan-Sparta match will receive consideration as the strongest contender for the western championship. The Brewers lost to the Spartas by one goal two weeks ago, but Manhattan since has been strengthened by the signing of Bill Gonsalves, one of the nation's leading soccer players. He will be at inside right for the Brewers against Sparta.

Two other players last week displayed they are capable of playing important rôles. They are Eric Klaber, young Jewish refugee from Germany, and Alex Woods, who played in the English league for the last ten years.

One of the best crowds of the season is expected at the game between the Swedes and the Milwaukee Hungarians. The Hungarians are rated as one of the outstanding squads in Wisconsin. The Swedes are undefeated this season.

The Manhattan-Sparta lineups follow:

OMA MEETS RAY TOMORROW; AIMS AT 4TH IN ROW

McIntyre Faces McCoy in Marigold Semi-Final.

Lee Oma, Detroit light heavyweight, who defeated Ernie Valente and stopped Al Globe and Altus Allen in three previous Chicago appearances, will try to make it four in a row at the expense of Bob Ray of Danville, Ill., in a 10 round bout in Marigold Gardens tomorrow. Ray, a former sectional Golden Gloves winner, won a decision over Globe in his last start.

Bobby McIntyre, lightweight, also of Detroit, has been substituted for Young Kid McCoy in a six round semi-final against Joey Spiegel of Milwaukee. Additional matches will bring together Billy Bengal and Earl Peterson, Don Swenson and Tito Taylor, and Baby Lista and Bobby Ryan. The Bengal-Peterson match is set for five rounds, the others for four.

Jack Blackburn, trainer for Champion Joe Louis, has left for Buffalo, N. Y., where he will second Leroy Evans in an eight round fight against Jackie O'Sullivan of Niagara Falls tomorrow. Immediately after the match Blackburn will leave for La Crosse, Wis., to handle Louis in an exhibition there Tuesday against Clarence Brown and George Nicholson. It is understood Joe will collect $1,000 for the performance. Blackburn said the appearance will be the champion's last until he defends his title against Arturo Godoy in New York Feb. 9.

Emil Schulman, German refugee from Bavaria, who has been in this country only four months, will depart Tuesday for St. Paul for a 10 round clash Friday against Arne Anderson, heavyweight newcomer from Sweden. A six round secondary feature matches Frankie Agnes, Chicago lightweight, with Harvey Woods, St. Paul veteran. . . . Nate Druxman, Seattle promoter, has offered Johnny Paycheck, Chicago heavyweight, a fight with Cowboy Bill Boyd next month. . . . Promoter Irwin Schoenwald is seeking an opponent for Henry Wacker in Marigold arena Dec. 11. . . . An amateur boxing show will be held in Memorial auditorium, Gary, tomorrow and Tuesday under the auspices of the Good Fellow club of Gary. Another amateur card will be offered in St. Columbkille's auditorium, Paulina street and Grand avenue, Tuesday. Members of the arrangements committee are Joseph Higgins, James Close, and James Tracey. Eight fights between Catholic Youth organization representatives and two wrestling bouts will be presented. F. Day Rates 2d Rest in Drills for Angott

Davey Day, celever Chicago lightweight, showed to such good advantage in a five round workout against two sparmates in Trafton's gymnasium yesterday for a 12 round return bout with Sammy Angott in Chicago Stadium Friday that he has been excused from working out today. It will be his second respite in a week.

Sammy Angott.

Day, who lost a split decision to Angott on Oct. 6, was in rare form yesterday during two rounds against Leonard Bennett, welterweight, and three against Nick Castiglione, lightweight. Altho both sparmates possess more skill than is ordinary for punch absorbers, Day handled each with ease. Several times Day could have floored either mate. His left jab and hook landed with regularity and precision and his right was busy and accurate too.

At Fighting Weight.

After the workout Day weighed 137 pounds. This is the stipulated weight for the encore, but Managers Art Winch and Sam Pian believe today's layoff will give their protége a chance to put on a couple of pounds to work off before he ends training Thursday.

Day is working harder than ever for this rematch because he knows a second defeat at this time will ruin his chances for a prospective welterweight title bout with Champion Henry Armstrong next February.

Day is bubbling over with enthusiasm and confidence. The danger now is that he may enter the ring a bit overconfident.

Zale Also Gets Rest.

Tony Zale, middleweight stablemate of Day, also will be given a rest today, after training steadily for three weeks. Zale meets Ernest [Babe] Orgovan in an eight round supporting match on the Stadium program. If he wins, Tony, who has knocked out his last four opponents, will be in line for a contest with Champion Al Hostak in Chicago this winter.

Zale also will resume workouts this afternoon by going four rounds, two each with Jack Cooper, welterweight, and Charley Banks, light heavyweight.

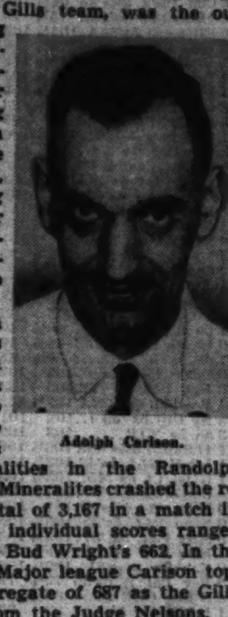
Angott will arrive tomorrow from his home in Louisville. He will be after his 15th consecutive triumph. A potential lightweight championship contest with Champion Lou Ambers in New York next spring will depend on Angott's showing Friday.

Castiglione will appear in an additional eight round contest on the program against Eddie Lander of the west side. F. M.

Adolph Carlson Rolls 753 in Randolph League Bowling

BY C. H. BEUKEMA.

Adolph Carlson, anchor man of the Joseph L. Gills team, was the outstanding performer in Chicago's major bowling competition during the last week, dropping pins for high individual totals in two leagues.



Adolph Carlson.

Carlson rolled 753 as his team piled up a 3,213 total to win two games from the Mineralites in the Randolph league. The Mineralites crashed the respectable total of 3,167 in a match in which their individual scores ranged from 603 to Bud Wright's 662. In the Gold Coast Major league Carlson toppled an aggregate of 687 as the Gills won two from the Judge Nelsons.

Carlson opened his Randolph league series with 249, then dropped to 246 and finished with 258. In the Gold Coast league his line read 244-218-225. In his first effort of the week, in the Windy City league, Carlson just made the honor roll, topping off 194 and 193 games with a 216 for a final total of 603.

Randolph League.

In addition to the Gills and Mineralites, the Nonebetter Ice Creams exceeded 3,100 in the Randolph league. They bowled the night's high game, 1,109, then dropped to 982, and tapered off with 1,056 for 3,147. Individual stars included Al Novak and John Small with 667; John Sehr, with 675; Otto Mauge, 673; Al Kowalski, 651, and Peter Butler, 646.

Gold Coast League.

The Budweisers rolled 3,118 to win all three games from the Triangle Shirts and maintain their five game lead in the Gold Coast Major league. George Miller with 686 and George Calder, 680, led the Buds. Herman Wenholz's 632 paced the Triangles.

The Pabsts totaled 3,111 to shut out the Marx Restaurant and gain a second place margin of one game over the Gills. Les Fuller with 652 and Joe Fischer, 642, led the Pabsts, while Tom McPherson got 637 for the Marx. The Kruse Service Stations won the odd game from Gold Coast, and Atlas Beers took two from Art J. Williams Jewelers.

Windy City Major League.

The four leaders in the Windy City league, separated by four games, swept thru their opposition without the loss of a game. The Budweisers, who are setting the pace with 28 games won and 8 lost, shut out the Vogel Brothers five; the Mineralites remained two games behind the Buds by blanking the Betinis Boosters on the evening's leading series, 3,182; the Joseph Gills, one game back of the Mineralites, bowled over the Furman Funerals, and the Quality Wet Wash, another game back, took three from the G. and W. 5 Stars.

George Notz of the Gills set the pace among the individuals with 249—264—225—738, followed by Jerry Skovie of the O'Keefe Coals with 725, and Joe Wilman of the Buds with 717. The O'Keefes' opening 1,116 was high game.

EXPECT REVIVAL OF FINANCING AFTER WAR LULL

Indiana Utility Offering Scheduled This Week.

As a result of the successful offering last week of $52,500,000 of obligations of the Public Service Company of Colorado, the long dormant investment business is expected in La Salle street to start a moderate revival. The outbreak of the war had put a quietus on security offerings.

One substantial offer is assured for this week—$48,000,000 in obligations of the Public Service Company of Indiana. A smaller offering, but one that is of interest because it will provide new capital for a company engaged in the capital goods business, will be $1,070,000 in stock of the Hydraulic Press Manufacturing company.

Indiana Utility Offering.

The Indiana utility issue is expected to be marketed on Thursday by a group headed by Halsey, Stuart & Co., Chicago. It will consist of $38,000,000 of 3¾ per cent bonds, due 1969, and $10,000,000 of serial debentures, due serially semi-annually, Sept. 1, 1940 to Sept. 1, 1949. The interest rate on the debentures will be announced later. Proceeds will be used to refund outstanding obligations now bearing interest at as high as 6½ per cent. Public Service of Indiana, which is controlled by the Midland United company, serves 52 counties in central and southern Indiana.

Hydraulic Press Financing.

The Hydraulic Press offering will consist of 26,400 shares of 6 per cent cumulative convertible stock, $25 par, and 92,800 shares of $5 par common stock. The underwriters are F. Eberstadt & Co., New York, and Hawley, Huller & Co., Cleveland.

Proceeds will be used $500,000 to provide for additions to the company's manufacturing and office facilities to take care of increasing business and the remainder for working capital. The company located at Mount Gilead, O., manufactures hydraulic power presses used for forming metals and plastics in numerous industries. The expanding aviation industry has used a substantial number of the presses.

INDENTURE LAW—II.

The new federal trust indenture law, which becomes effective Feb. 4, 1940, places heavier responsibilities upon the trustees to safeguard the interests of bondholders. Altho the trustee's duties have been usually nominal when the corporation met interest, principal, and sinking fund payments, this passive function is considered inadequate under the new statute.

The trustee will be required to issue periodic reports to bondholders regarding his continued eligibility. He will have to inform them of loans he makes to the debtor corporation as an individual creditor, the condition of the property he holds in trust, and give notice within 90 days of all defaults on interest and principal.

He will also require from the debtor company numerous reports demonstrating the latter's compliance with the covenants of the indenture, opinions, and certificates concerning the pledged property and application of proceeds. Also the trustee will have to maintain a current list of bondholders and make copies available at the request of any three bondholders.

Often banks or trust companies lend money to corporations for whom they are acting as trustees. The law compels the trustee not only to make these loans public but also to share any cash or property which he may obtain from the debtor company in the four months preceding a default, or after the default occurs. The trustee is also forbidden to extend new secured loans if he has reason to anticipate a default by the company on its bonds.

In order to remain eligible the trustee must avoid any direct or indirect affiliations with the debtor corporation or the underwriters of the issue.

When the trustee learns of a default or believes it will occur, he cannot wait until the bondholders demand that he act, but he must initiate action to protect their interests. He is required to exercise the same care and judgment a "prudent man" would use in guarding his personal rights.

The probable effects of the law on corporate financing will not be defined clearly until after the SEC issues its detailed regulations.

Some legal and financial critics predict that the application of the new requirements will impede the process of registering new debt securities and will burden corporations unnecessarily in preparing reports involving added expense.

Banks may be reluctant to make loans to corporations when they are acting as trustees on their securities. It is also felt that the act may accentuate the trend toward private sales of corporation securities to insurance companies and institutional investors in which no public offering is involved. Earlier federal legislation regulating the underwriting and sale of publicly offered security issues has had that tendency.

CHICAGO'S PORK OUTPUT SPURTS 100% IN 2 MONTHS

Week's Production Above 22½ Million Pounds.

Pork production in Chicago last week showed the largest increase for any one week since January, 1938, a survey of packinghouse operations disclosed yesterday. It was estimated that the total output for all plants exceeded 22½ million pounds, the heaviest tonnage handled by the industry here since last December.

This vast output of pork exceeded the preceding week's production by 6½ million pounds, or about 40 per cent, and it showed a gain of 11½ million pounds, or more than 100 per cent, compared with two months ago. All packing plants in this area, unaccustomed to such volume during recent weeks, worked at capacity to handle the supply.

Killing Gangs Increased.

Practically all of the principal Chicago packers hurriedly increased their killing gangs and brought into use facilities for handling pork and hogs which for many months have remained idle. One of the largest packers announced near the close of the week that slaughtering in its plant had reached 10,000 hogs a day. Moreover, arrangements were being made to expand operations further this week should the movement of hogs from farms warrant. Another big plant also expects to be in position to butcher 10,000 hogs daily early this week. One plant was able to handle 7,000 a day before the end of the week. Numerous smaller plants killed from 500 to 1,500 daily.

The Chicago stockyards received a total of 127,300 hogs during the week, including direct shipments to packers. This was the largest run since the week ended Dec. 17, 1938. This supply compared with 90,596 during the preceding week.

Plants Get Larger Share.

Plants here handled a larger share of the country's hog crop than usual during the week, because of the relatively higher level of prices existing in the market. Shipments were unusually heavy from some sections of Iowa where farmers said "interior" packers were bidding extremely low.

Hog raisers from some such regions said they obtained from 75 cents to $1.00 more per hundred pounds for their hogs in Chicago than the best bids they were able to get locally.

Owners of some of the hogs that sold late in the week at $5.50 to $5.70, near the top of the price list, reported bidding for similar kinds in their section of Iowa at $4.70 to $5.00. Some Illinois hog raisers, nearer the city, reported margins of 50 cents or more over home bids.

Influenced by the heavy movement of hogs, buyers of other live stock obtained concessions in most classes. Beef steers closed the week from steady to 50 cents lower. The six day steer average at $9.45, off 20 cents, was second lowest since August.

The average price of lambs for the week declined 20 cents to $8.95, the lowest in 13 weeks.

SUGGEST BUDGET GROUP TO HELP CHECK SPENDING

Unit of Congress Would Recommend Totals.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—The creation of a congressional budget committee was proposed by the United States Chamber of Commerce today as a means of overhauling government spending.

The committee would consider and report on the budget situation as a whole soon after receipt of the President's estimates for each fiscal year. The committee then would recommend a general total of expenditures before congress adopted, piecemeal, the numerous authorization and appropriations measures under the suggested plan.

"This central budget agency would not deal with details but would consider totals and the general fiscal situation," said a chamber statement. "The total of the detailed amounts later recommended by committees should not exceed the grand total earlier agreed upon by congress.

Retains Present Committees.

"Such an agency when established woud not supplant the existing appropriation committee and revenue raising committees. These would continue to formulate the details of appropriations and tax measures.

"This procedure would provide congress with a better picture of fiscal operations as a whole and a clearer understanding of trends. It would enable the public to obtain a better grasp of the financial affairs of the government. It would encourage resistance to new or enlarged appropriations urged by special interest or pressure groups. It would contribute to formulation of better fiscal policies in protection of taxpayers and of the credit of the government.

"It is high time for the congress to consider revamping the federal budget act. That act has not been changed since it was adopted in 1921. In some respects it is not suited to needs that have developed.

Criticizes Present Plan.

"It permits, in fact contemplates, that the President shall submit to congress suggestions for expenditures for every type of activity on the statute books. It should provide that an executive budget of expenditures be submitted that would not exceed the expected revenues, with, if need be, a supplementary statement as to additional expenditures for desirable items, provided that revenues could be found.

"We are in the 10th year of deficits. It is significant to compare this decade of annual deficits, 1931-'40, with the preceding decade, 1921-'30, which was one of annual surpluses.

"The revenues were about the same in each period, about 41 billion dollars. But, in the current 10 year period expenditures will total 68 billions, with deficits of 27 billions, whereas in the preceding decade expenditures were under 34 billions and the surplus, from revenues, was eight billions."

SCANDINAVIAN BOND PRICES DROP FURTHER

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Further drastic declines occurred in some of the Scandinavian countries' bonds today. Most domestic issues either stood still or were slightly higher.

HALF A BILLION OF AERONAUTIC ORDERS PLACED

Estimate Indicates Big Output Rise.

New York, Dec. 2 [Special].—Substantial new orders from Britain and France for aircraft, received since the lifting of the export embargo, have probably raised the total of unfilled orders well above the half billion dollar mark, a survey by the Standard Statistics company indicated today. No official figures are available and the companies report their backlogs only at irregular intervals, but it is believed that orders totaling around $100,000,000 were received from the empires within a few days of the passage of the amended neutrality legislation.

Exports of aircraft, nearly all military, this year are estimated at $100,000,000, against $62,000,000 in 1938. Prospects for 1940, the survey says, point to the doubling of the 1939 figure. In addition to the export orders, United States government plans will play a big part in the expansion of the aircraft industry in the next year or so.

Estimates Unfilled Orders.

Estimated unfilled orders on the books of the leading aircraft builders, compared with those reported at the close of 1938, follow:

	End of 1938.	Current.
Aviation Corp.	$1,200,000	$7,000,000
Bell Aircraft	3,675,000	7,000,000

Army and Navy to Expand.

Under legislation enacted in April, 1939, the United States army air corps is to be built up to between 5,500 and 6,000 first line planes not later than June, 1941. Actual strength of the air corps at the time of this legislation was about one-third of the established goal.

The navy program calls for building up the air arm of that service to 3,000 first line planes within a few years. The navy air fleet had reached about 2,000 planes early in 1939.

Even these programs, which were adopted before the outbreak of the war, would mean a substantial volume of business for the aircraft and parts manufacturers. By the time the goals are achieved a substantial potential replacement business will exist, according to the survey.

American plants expect a potential productivity of 23,000 airplanes and 30,000 aircraft engines a year by June, 1940, some sources assert. That is larger than any estimate of German airplane and engine production made prior to the start of the present war, and Germany was believed to have the greatest output of warplanes in the world.

Big Production Boost.

Output of 23,000 airplanes a year would mean a boost in American production of almost 100 per cent dating from June, 1939. Last June fewer than 40,000 persons were employed by American aviation plants. Under the stimulus of foreign orders, employment has jumped to 50,000, and the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America estimates that current and prospective orders will require 100,000 workers by next summer.

With Europe at war a substantial stepping-up of the American army and navy air programs is expected. Congress will be asked to authorize an increase in the navy's goal to 6,000 planes, to be reached within a few years, and the army's to perhaps 8,000 or 9,000 planes.

The regular army appropriation for the 1939 and 1940 fiscal years was increased by $170,000,000 for additional aircraft, and all of these funds were obligated by late 1939, with deliveries to extend into 1941. If the expected increase in the goal is authorized, the survey says, deliveries on previously placed contracts for both the army and navy will doubtless be speeded up.

HULL REFUSES TO RECONSIDER OIL TARIFF CUT

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 [Special].—Secretary of State Cordell Hull today declined to reconsider the tariff concession on crude oil granted in the trade agreement with Venezuela in a letter to Gov. Payne Ratner of Kansas. Ratner had asked that the whole question be reviewed, on the ground that Kansas interests were injured.

"Kansas stands to benefit both directly and indirectly by the agreement with Venezuela," Hull wrote, "as a result of the concessions obtained by the United States in the agreement on a considerable range of American farm and factory products, including some of direct interest to Kansas. Among the latter are reductions in duty on hog lard and wheat flour and bindings of the present duties on bacon, hams, pork sausages, and canned pork."

Bethlehem Steel to Erect $500,000 Office Building

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 2 (AP).—Officials of the Consolidated Engineering company announced today they had received the contract for the erection of a half million dollar general office building for the Bethlehem Steel corporation at Sparrows Point, Md. Excavating will be started at once and the building completed in six or eight months.

Shippers Flail Rate Decision FavoringSouth

Trade association officials and private shippers yesterday attacked the recent interstate commerce commission ruling thru which the south won a freight rate victory over the north. Several shippers expressed the belief that the commission's 5 to 4 vote opened the door for a rehearing of the matter.

J. P. Haynes assails rate decision.

The ruling, handed down on Thursday, held that rates on certain manufactured and processed goods from the south should be on substantially the same rate level as rates within the north. The ruling applied only to northbound shipments. Altho the ruling covered only a small list of manufactured and processed items, southern interests hailed it as an important victory.

Charge Burden on Industry.

Serious burdens would be imposed upon many industries in this state if the commission's decision were put into effect, the Illinois Manufacturers' association said. The association declared it would, upon receiving the official decision, take immediate steps for a petition for a rehearing of the case or would take any other steps necessary to protect the interests of Illinois manufacturers and shippers.

"There are many industries in this state," the statement said, "which will be affected by this decision, including particularly manufacturers or processors of stoves and ranges, stone, enameled iron or steel, and plumbers' goods. Moreover, if this principle in rate making is established for these particular items, it may ultimately be applied to all goods manufactured and processed in this state.

Defends Rate Differentials.

"The rate differentials now existing between the southern territory and this area are justified by existing material differences in transportation and operating conditions. The traffic density in the official northern territory is two or three times that of the traffic density in the southern region and operating costs are higher by approximately 30 per cent."

The Illinois Manufacturers' association intervened in the case before the interstate commerce commission, opposing the revision and reduction of southern rates. The Southern Governors' conference entered the plea for the revised rates.

James P. Haynes, executive vice president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, also criticized the ruling. He said the commerce body has no quarrel with southern manufacturers, but that it believes freight rates should be based on the density of traffic involved.

Asserts North Is Handicapped.

"The worst part of this decision," Haynes commented, "is that the rates would apply on northbound shipments only. Manufacturers north of the Ohio river would then be at a disadvantage."

One Chicago shipping official said he believed the interstate commerce commission's decision was based on its geographical makeup and because of encouragement to southern shippers by the federal administration. He said four of the five members voting in favor of the change were from the south, while the fifth member, who was from Oregon, was probably influenced by other motives.

This same official said he believed interests could muster sufficient strength at a rehearing to gain a favorable decision.

THREE HEARINGS SCHEDULED BY MONOPOLY PROBE

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 [Special].—The temporary national economic committee announced today that it will hold three sets of hearings this month. These hearings begin Monday with a week's study of prices and price movements, to be followed by hearings on life insurance and investment banking.

The price hearings have been called, said Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, committee chairman, "to provide a foundation for our future work and to inform the public of the underlying characteristics of the current situation." They are in line with President Roosevelt's request that the committee maintain a "constant surveillance" on price movements.

Demands Full Report.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—A demand that a "full bill of particulars" accompany all official comments on prices came from the United States chamber of commerce today.

"All agitation about price levels," the chamber said, "should be scrutinized from an entirely realistic point of view, and there should be a demand that every statement coming from official sources and intimating that American enterprise is exacting unfairly high prices in a period of general tension should be accompanied with a full and true description of the situation surrounding and affecting each price."

Subsidy Cotton Export Sales 4,332,000 Bales

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—The agriculture department reported today sales of cotton and cotton products under the export subsidy program totaled 4,332,000 bales between July 27 and Nov. 30. This volume included cotton products equivalent to 215,000 bales. Under the export program the government makes payments of 1.5 cents a pound on exports of raw cotton and equivalent payments on exports of cotton products.

MEXICAN HIGH COURT UPHOLDS OIL LAND GRAB

Affects $400,000,000 of Property.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 2 (AP).—The Supreme court today voted unanimously to uphold the government's expropriation of the vast foreign oil industry in Mexico. The decision rejected the appeal of 17 American, British, and Netherlands companies which have carried on a two year court fight.

The four justices voted to sustain the March 18, 1938, expropriation of immovable properties, principal issue of the appeal. The opinion provided:

1. The expropriation was not unconstitutional and did not violate personal guarantees.

2. A denial that the companies ever owned the subsoil, which was held to be the exclusive property of the nation.

Rule on Compensation.

3. The companies are entitled to compensation for the expropriation of their wells and their capital invested directly and "legitimately" for the exploitation of the oil industry.

4. Indemnification must be made within 10 years from proceeds of the government's operation of the industry.

5. The companies are entitled to the return of their records, archives, accounts, and cash seized in the course of the expropriation.

The next move in the conflict was expected to come soon when the departments of finance and national economy present their valuations of the properties as a basis for indemnification. Valuations thus far placed on the properties by Mexico and the companies differ by many millions of dollars. The companies' figure is more than $400,000,000.

Predict Another Fight.

Observers predicted another long court fight over this issue. Spokesmen for American companies indicated they intended to appeal to Washington for intervention. One said the decision meant that "oil companies are thru in Mexico."

Diplomatic circles said the United States state department had two courses of possible intervention: To seek an "arrangement" with the Mexican government satisfactory to the oil interests, or declare there had been a denial of justice and request Mexico to agree to the appointment of an international tribunal to arbitrate the issue.

No Surprise to Companies.

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Executives of American oil companies whose Mexican properties were seized by the Mexican government expressed "no surprise" today at the decision of the Mexican Supreme court upholding the expropriation. Public statements made by members of the court some weeks ago, they said, indicated the body planned to uphold the taking over of the oil lands.

The decision of the highest Mexican court, it was said, "exhausts the last possibility of regaining the properties by legal action." Whatever is to be done from now on toward return of the properties, the oil men said, would have to be done by the state department in Washington.

Await Official Notice.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—State department officials said today they were not surprised by the decision of Mexico's Supreme court upholding that government's expropriation of foreign oil properties. They withheld further comment, however, pending official notification of the court's decision. The United States never has challenged Mexico's right to expropriate property, but has insisted that the owners be compensated.

EGGS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY RALLY AFTER NEW DIP

The sharp decline in egg futures last week came to an abrupt halt on the Chicago Mercantile exchange yesterday after light overnight selling earlier had forced prices to new seasonal lows for the fifth consecutive day.

Futures prices rallied quickly later in the session on covering and speculative buying, and pushed upward from the year's lows for net gains of 0.5 to 0.55 cent a dozen.

Much of the strength shown by the market reflected decreased local receipts and improved storage withdrawal statistics.

Cash egg markets were easy with New York new-laid qualities ½ to 1½ cents lower. First grades led the decline.

Butter futures made gains of 0.2 cent a pound in light trading, with the February delivery advancing at one time to 27¼ cents.

Pittsburgh Bank to Charge Christmas Club Savings Fee

Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 2 (AP).—The Pitt National bank today announced a service charge of 50 cents annually on each 1940 Christmas club savings account. Officials said the charge merely would cover the cost of supplies such as stationery and forms. "We had found we were out about $1,000 a year in conducting the Christmas clubs," said the announcement.

URBAN BUILDING PERMITS 260,000 IN NINE MONTHS

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—Building permits were issued for nearly 260,000 new dwelling units in urban areas during the first nine months of this year, the labor department reported today.

Of the total units, 68 per cent were in one-family dwellings, 5 per cent in two-family dwellings, and 27 per cent in apartment houses. The permits amounted to $926,208,000.

Stewart McDonald, the federal housing administrator, reported that construction of 11,003 homes under FHA inspection was begun during the four weeks ended Nov. 25, an increase of 28 per cent over the corresponding period in 1938.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2 (AP).—Treasury figures showed today that the government had gone $1,703,045,860 "into the red" during the first five months of the current fiscal year. In the same period last year the deficit was $1,436,136,765.

The federal debt stood at $41,305,056,749 on Nov. 30. The excess of expenditures over income during November was $284,039,261, compared with $296,943,555 in the same month last year.

Total receipts for the five months were $2,175,093,265, against $2,222,791,416 in the same period a year ago.

PARTS OF YOUR NEXT CAR MAY BE EX-SAWDUST

New Plastic Found in Wood Waste .

Madison, Wis., Dec. 2 (AP).—Lignin, a wood derivative long discarded as waste matter, may become the Cinderella of the lumber and paper industries as a result of the federal government's research into its plastic possibilities.

At the United States Forest Products laboratory here, where experiments have been carried on for more than 10 years, research workers said the product, low in cost, may supplant wood and steel, as well as other elements, in the automobile, electrical, building, furniture, and other industries.

Variety of Possible Uses.

The dashboard and steering wheel, perhaps even the doors and smaller panels, on your next car may be made of lignin plastic. It has been found satisfactory for electrical insulation, wallboard, large panelling surfaces, radio knobs, gun stocks, and hundreds of novelty items.

Elwin E. Harris, laboratory chemist, said the automotive industry probably would be the first to put it to general use. "There isn't a week goes by that some representative of the big automotive manufacturers doesn't drop in here," he said. "Henry Ford has installed a lignin plastic panel in the trunk of one of his cars and is putting it to severe tests."

Lignin is produced by "cooking" the caustic solvents out of sawdust or the waste material left after pulp and paper operations. When dried, it turns to a brownish powder. When heat and pressure is applied, it forms a solid, durable, anti-absorbent, dark brown plastic.

Many Advantages Described.

Many of its features, Harris said, make it desirable in the eyes of the automobile makers and other industrialists.

Its cost has been estimated to be one-fourth that of molding powders now on the market. It contracts and expands very little, withstands hard blows, and can be molded easily, which is important in cutting down the number of operations necessary on wood and steel products.

COUNT 8,149,000 IDLE, LOWEST IN OVER TWO YEARS

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Jobless persons in the United States in October totaled 8,149,000, the lowest estimate since November, 1937, the National Industrial Conference board announced today.

The board, a private research organization supported chiefly by corporations, figured the net unemployment total dropped 47,000 during October, the third consecutive month of decline, making a drop of more than a million from the October, 1938, estimate of 9,244,000.

Unusual increases in most manufacturing industries, notably automobiles and steel, more than offset the seasonal decline in farm work, the board noted.

The total at work in private industry and agriculture was put at 46,446,000, compared with 35,884,000 in March, 1933, at the depression low in employment, and the 1929 average of 47,925,000.

SLASH ILLINOIS CORN ACREAGE IN AAA PROGRAM

Subsidy Limited to Complying Farmers.

Decatur, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—Illinois' corn acreage was reduced sharply under terms of the 1940 Agricultural Adjustment administration program announced here today by Lee M. Gentry, state AAA committee chairman. The state's planting goal follows last week's announcement of national acreage reductions, the burden of which fell on farmers in the corn belt.

Only those farmers who comply with governmental planting regulations will share in the various federal bounties paid for compliance with restrictions involved in the "ever normal granary" plan of Secretary Wallace.

Illinois Acreage Slashed.

The Illinois corn allotment for next year was established at 6,513,876 acres, compared with 7,308,282 for this year. The national reduction was from 42,256,000 acres in 1939 to 36,638,000 in 1940.

Gentry said the Illinois allotment applies to all corn producers in the commercial corn area which, as in 1939, will include all Illinois counties except Jefferson, Franklin, and Williamson. The reduction, he said, will not be uniform among all counties or producers, but may vary considerably above or below the average according to local conditions.

County AAA committees will receive county allotments within a few days, and by Jan. 1 are expected to have individual farm allotments in the hands of producers, Gentry said.

Regard Supply Plentiful.

Gentry said the planting restrictions are the result of plentiful corn supplies, increased use of hybrid seed corn, which has brought large increases in yields per acre, and the retirement of less productive lands to soil conserving crops under the AAA program.

Next year's corn yields are expected to average 41.3 bushels an acre, compared with 36.6 bushels in 1939. This increase, Gentry said, is proportionally larger than the reduction sought in planted acreage.

[Yields per acre were based on figures compiled by state agricultural officials, it was said. Federal government authorities have placed the 1939 yield in Illinois as high as 51.5 bushels an acre.]

The rate of payment under soil conservation phases of the agricultural program has been increased from 9 cents a bushel in 1939 to 10 cents next year, computed on the normal yield of the allotment.

1940 Goal for All Crops.

The 1940 planting goal for all soil depleting crops in Illinois was set at 13,996,248 acres, compared with 14,691,848 in 1939. Goals for crops, in addition to corn, are wheat, 1,938,259 acres, against 1,780,240 this year; and cotton, 5,200 acres, the same as for 1939. Soil conservation payments will be made next year at the rate of 9 cents a bushel on wheat, 1.6 cents a pound on cotton, and at $1.10 an acre, adjusted for productivity, on general soil-depleting crops.

In addition to the soil conservation payments, farmers complying with the government's program will be eligible for "parity" payments in the event prices of wheat, corn, cotton, and tobacco are less than 75 per cent of pre-1914 averages.

The allowance for crops which do not deplete the soil has been increased from 50 to 55 cents an acre. Gentry said the allowance will be increased on small farms so that the conservation payments and the payment for special crop acreage allotments together will be at least $20. Each farm may earn as much as $30 in addition for planting forest trees.

Under the 1940 program, payments are also revised to encourage soil-conserving practices not generally followed on farms in Illinois.

Ohio Sues to Class Tire Guarantee as Insurance

Columbus, O., Dec. 2 (AP).—Attorney General Thomas J. Herbert today sued in the Ohio supreme court to prevent the Standard Oil company and Sears, Roebuck & Co. from guaranteeing automobile tires for a specific length of time without obtaining a certificate of authority to engage in the insurance business. Herbert, acting for the state superintendent of insurance, contended in his petition that guaranteeing tires against failure not caused by defects in workmanship and materials constituted a contract of insurance.

Use of Hybrid Corn Upsets Federal Plans

BY MORRIS GREEN.

A revolution has taken place in the cornfields of the middle west, grain men said yesterday. The new high yielding hybrid corn has replaced the ordinary open pollinated variety as king of the prairie states, and has upset a good many established calculations in doing so. Hybrid corn, along with better methods of cultivation and retirement of marginal land, was responsible for the 12 per cent reduction in the corn acreage allotted for the 1940 crop in the commercial corn growing states, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said on Nov. 25, when he announced the 1940 allotment. Thus Wallace admitted that one of his own calculations was on the list of upsets.

Secretary Wallace.

Wallace Calculations Upset.

In 1934 Wallace, who with Mrs. Wallace held a substantial portion of stock in the Hi-Bred Corn company of Grimes, Ia., said that not enough hybrid seed corn could be marketed by his company in that year to plant more than 1½ per cent of the total Iowa corn acreage. It would be 10 years, he said, before enough hybrid seed could be produced to have an appreciable effect on corn production.

But only three years later 15 per cent of the 1937 Iowa crop was planted to hybrid seed, half of it sold by the Hi-Bred company. In 1938 it was 58 per cent. This year it was 81 per cent. This year Illinois hybrid seed plantings were estimated by grain men at 70 per cent of the state's acreage. Next year more acres will be seeded to the new variety.

Farmers' Income Affected.

Altho the hybrid corn has not yet found particular favor outside of the commercial corn states, it has become an all-important factor in farm income in the middle west, where corn, as grain or as live stock, brings the farmer the biggest part of his income.

"This year's yields in the commercial corn area are the highest on record, despite drouth in many areas," Wallace said in announcing the 1940 allotments. The yield per acre in both Illinois and Iowa, was placed at 51.5 bushels in the agriculture department's Nov. 1 crop estimate. The 10 year average yield in Illinois was only 33.8 bushels per acre. In Iowa it was only 35.5 bushels per acre.

Hybrid Seed High Priced.

Only the fact that many farmers have not adjusted themselves to the plan of buying corn seed—and hybrid seed must be purchased—has kept more of them from turning to the new variety. Hybrid seed is produced for seeding purposes only, and costs about $6 a bushel at present. One bushel will seed six acres, so it costs about twice as much to seed an acre with hybrid corn as with ordinary corn grown by the farmer himself. Ordinary corn is selling for about 50 cents a bushel in Chicago at present.

But the cost in the long run is cheaper. Yields average 20 per cent larger than with ordinary corn. In some cases almost incredible yields have resulted. Roland Resler, for instance, produced 1,028 bushels of corn on a six acre field south of Champaign, Ill., this year. This was an average of 171 bushels per acre.

Warns Against Soil Depletion.

However, last January a soil specialist at the University of Illinois agricultural college, C. M. Linsley, warned farmers that "miracle hybrids that can produce bumper yields without taking anything from the soil are yet to be produced." He said in growing more corn on fewer acres at less cost farmers should devote the free land thus obtained to soil building legumes in order to avoid depletion of soil fertility.

The following table compares the corn yield per acre in the United States with the yield in four of the leading corn states.

United States	28.6	27.7	23.0
Illinois	51.5	48.0	33.8
Iowa	51.5	45.5	35.5
Indiana	51.0	41.0	33.5
Ohio	49.0	44.0	36.5

*Estimated.

In the states outside of the commercial corn growing area, where hybrid corn has not been planted to any large extent, such startling increases in the average yield per acre have not been recorded.

TRADE FALTERS AS AUTUMN RISE SPENDS FORCE

Shrinkages in New Orders Reported.

BY LELAND FORRESTER.

Signs of a slackening in industry and wholesale trade imparted an appearance of spottiness to business last week. A few lines of industry kept output at or above the preceding week's high levels, but did so by letting their productive machinery gnaw into backlogs of orders that piled up in September and October.

As a result of normal seasonal influences or other factors, there were increasing reports of a shrinkage in the volume of new orders placed with manufacturers, including steel, textile and rail equipment makers.

Steel Production Expands.

Nevertheless, steel mills increased operations for the fifth consecutive week to the highest rate since compilation of records was begun in 1933, and another leading branch of industry—automobile manufacturing—expanded. Increases were reported in the volume of new corporate financing and bank clearings.

Retail trade was one of the brightest spots in business. Sales to consumers increased and merchants and fact finding organizations predicted the largest Christmas buying volume since 1929. They based the forecast on estimates showing that employment and the national income have increased in the last year. The gain in national income in 1939 as compared with 1938 was figured variously at 4 to 8 billion dollars.

Wholesale Trade More Cautious.

The trend in wholesale trade was less cheering, with Dun & Bradstreet reporting that a spirit of caution prevailed in purchasing policies. The mercantile agency said new orders in wholesale markets are chiefly of the filling in variety.

Among other indices of activity declines were reported in cotton textile manufacturing, residential building, engineering construction awards, electric power output, and railroad freight loadings. The latest figures on power and freight were for the week ended Nov. 25, which included the Thanksgiving day holiday. The drop in freight was more than seasonal, however.

Industrial Index Rises.

The Associated Press index of industrial activity rose to 108.9 per cent of the 1929-'30 average, from 108.8 per cent in the preceding week. The index, with its seasonally adjusted components, compared as follows:

DOLLAR WHEAT PRICE IS POSTED IN CASH MARKET

Quotation Highest Since March Last Year.

The return of dollar a bushel wheat quotations in the Chicago cash market yesterday accompanied another brisk runup in prices of the futures. Altho no grades good enough to bring $1 were available, the price was posted at that level for the first time since March, 1938.

The quotation was established for high grade No. 2 red wheat. Other grades sold at 92 cents in the cash market.

Early trading in wheat futures resulted in advances of about 1 cent a bushel to 93¾ cents for the December delivery, the highest price that delivery has attained since late in 1937 and the top price for any contract since February, 1938.

Close Fractionally Higher.

The advance attracted selling which brokers attributed to profit taking, however, and closing gains were pared to ⅛ and ⅜ cent. At the peak of the rise, which was the fifth consecutive daily advance, the December delivery was 3⅛ cents above the peak established early in September after the outbreak of the war in Europe.

Indication that mills had made additional large sales of flour to the domestic trade and a weather bureau forecast that rain was unlikely in the drouth stricken areas in the western and southwestern parts of the winter wheat belt were the bullish influences.

Export demand for Canadian wheat and flour was reported slow. Winnipeg interests estimated that 50,000,000 bushels were sold in the last six weeks.

Trading Volume Rises.

Speculative interest in the grain markets showed a material increase in the last week. Sales of all futures on the Chicago Board of Trade aggregated 155,616,000 bushels, or a daily average of 26,000,000 bushels. This was 11,000,000 bushels in excess of the daily average turnover in the preceding week.

Profit taking had a depressing effect on corn and other grains and soy beans, after an early upturn in sympathy with wheat. December oats sold at 39½ cents, a new high since July, 1937. Corn closed ¼ to ⅜ cent lower. Oats finished unchanged to ⅛ cent lower. Soy beans were ⅞ to 1¾ cents lower.

LEADING STOCKS LITTLE CHANGED IN DULL TRADING

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Dec. 2.—Stocks moved in an extremely narrow range today with leading issues such as steels, motors, and rails showing little change. Price changes were limited to fractions.

Many traders were absent and those who came to the market place did little. Volume was 228,100 shares, smallest for a Saturday since July 15. Business news continued favorable but was largely ignored.

Great Northern railway lost a point in an easier railway section. Chrysler was off half a point at the opening but finished unchanged. Yesterday's good earning statement and the $1 dividend helped sentiment.

Bethlehem stock declined ⅞. United States Steel advanced ⅛. Utilities were lifeless. Montgomery Ward and Sears Roebuck moved fractionally higher. Oils, coppers, chemicals, and aviations were little changed.

On the curb market, Aluminum company hovered around the previous closing level after yesterday's spurt of 11 points made on news of the first dividend payment in years.

Chicago Stocks Uneven; Volume Is 11,000 Shares

Gains and losses were about evenly divided in yesterday's trading on the Chicago Stock exchange. Twenty-six issues closed higher than on the preceding day, 21 declined, and 13 were unchanged. Transactions totaled 11,000 shares. Last week's trading volume was 143,000 shares, compared with 117,020 the week before and 120,600 a year ago.

SUGAR PRICES DIP, THEN RALLY IN WEEK'S TRADE

Metal Market Is Quiet; Export Copper Eases.

Two influences caused swings in the sugar futures market last week. These were reports that the government might abandon domestic production control in 1940, and new Cuban buying, apparently induced by belief that the United States and Cuba will negotiate a new trade treaty reducing the raw sugar tariff.

Domestic futures dropped 0.11 to 0.12 cent a pound in New York earlier in the week on the sugar control report. Prices rallied later on Cuban buying.

Metal Markets Quiet.

The metal markets were quiet last week. An increase of ¼ cent a pound in the price of most of its products was announced by the American Brass company. Export copper opened the week at 13.10 a pound but eased later to 13 cents.

Typical Saturday dullness prevailed in all leading nonferrous metal markets yesterday. Domestic copper was inactive, with leading primary producers and customs units maintaining the 12.50 price. There were some indications that Japan may re-enter the market, it was said.

Wool Tops Are Easier.

Wool tops futures closed unchanged to two points lower as Boston houses sold on reports that Great Britain may release 10 million pounds of wool for export to the United States. Other reports, however, said Canada is eight million pounds short of her requirements at the present.

Bleachable cottonseed oil futures and crude rubber futures pointed slightly lower. Straits tin futures remained unchanged. Prices follow:

[V]IEWS INDUSTRY ABSORBING ITS SHARE OF IDLE

[C]oonley Urges Ending of Deficit Spending.

New York, Dec. 2 [Special]. — [M]anufacturing industries have already absorbed their share of the unemployed, Howard Coonley, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, declared today. Remaining joblessness, he said in his annual report, "must be charged principally against service and retail trades, construction industries, and agriculture."

Howard Coonley.

His report will be submitted to the association's annual convention, known as the Congress of American Industry, which will be held here Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Coonley, who is chairman of the board of the Walworth company, manufacturer of valves and pipe fittings, analyzed this year's economic recovery.

Cites Industrial Progress.

"Industry has moved forward definitely; forward in its conception of duty toward the whole society; forward in its contribution toward recovery; forward in the regard of the public which it serves," he said.

Curtailment of government spending would be an important influence toward further improvement in general business, Coonley asserted. "Continual deficit spending, or adjustments in bookkeeping to hide the deficit, won't help business," he said. He called for the coöperation of industrialists in trimming governmental expenditures, asking them to "help your government curtail by not requesting any new expenditures."

He also demanded removal of taxes which he said discourage the investment of capital in production.

Criticizes Federal Theories.

"We should forget the something-for-nothing theories; all the governmental Santa Clauses," he said. He found encouragement, however, "in the fact that the government at least has made a start in correcting tax inequities."

On the subject of labor he said: "Organized labor, if it is to earn the public respect necessary to responsible collective bargaining, must clean its own house of the sitdown, slowdown, closed shop, and jurisdictional strikes."

Citing the growth in governmental regulation of business, he said: "We are stumbling into a burocratic despotism, which is demoralizing to the whole system of private enterprise." He advocated enaction of the Walter-Logan act, "which defines and limits administrative law already run rampant."

Appeals for Coöperation.

Advocating government-industry coöperation thru "a more highly organized department of commerce, Coonley said, "Honest government interest in promotion of further recovery thru industry should be reflected in a careful and frank examination of all policies and laws obstructing business development."

Coonley declared, "Dependency must not become a habit in America, not only because industry cannot stage recovery and pay taxes necessary for such dependency, but because such leaning on the state destroys the moral fiber of the people and must ultimately undermine their ability to defend their country."

He asserted "it is little less than shameful" that some means has not been found for the training of apprentices in skilled trades.

WATER FLOW DAMPENS WILLIAMSON COUNTY'S EXCITEMENT OVER OIL

Herrin, Ill., Dec. 2 [Special].—Water began causing trouble today at the Nation Brothers' No. 1 Coleman oil well near here and dampened the excitement which first reports on the well had caused in Williamson county. The well flowed for a short time yesterday after an acid treatment.

Charles Nation, one of the owners, said the well had been drilled too deep and that water had begun to flow in from the bottom. He said the bottom would be filled with 12 feet of concrete to keep out the water. This is termed a "squeeze job." The well is 1,990 feet deep.

Yesterday it was announced the oil flow was 25 barrels in 32 minutes, but today Ben Nation said part of the initial flow was oil which had been poured into the well as a "load" to pack the acid.

Oil operations in Illinois decreased to 445 this week. They included 91 well completions, of which 68 were producing wells and 71 first reports on new wells. The Lake Centralia pool had 79 operations and 22 new wells.

WILLKIE CHARGES "NIGHT ATTACK" BY SEC ON UTILITY

Replies to Otis & Co. Stock Offer.

New York, Dec. 2 [Special].—Foes of the utility industry and of the Commonwealth and Southern corporation in particular have adopted a new strategy of "night-time attack," Wendell L. Willkie, president of the corporation asserted today.

Willkie was replying to the proposal by Otis & Co., "released after office hours last night by a member of the Securities and Exchange commission," to buy a block of the common stock of the Consumers Power company "at some unnamed price" in excess of $28.25 a share.

Offer of Otis & Co.

The Otis firm, Cleveland investment concern, offered to underwrite a sufficient amount of the stock. "To furnish all or any part of the $13,500,000 of new money" which Consumers Power proposes to obtain thru sale of bonds and stock. Commonwealth & Southern, which is scheduled to purchase the new common stock, owns all of Consumers' present outstanding common stock.

Willkie demanded the motives of Otis & Co. in taking such a sudden interest in utility stocks.

"Price Is Artificial."

The price of $28.25 a share for stock to be delivered by the wholly-owned subsidiary to wipe out loans from the holding company, he said, was artificial and set by the SEC. The original price set by the company was $60.

"I would like to know," he said, "whether Otis & Co. would be willing to pay this price for all the common stock, which would make the common stock of Consumers Power company worth $100,000,000."

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—Depositors and other creditors of the 17 closed national banks in Cook county can expect an average return of 7.18 per cent of their claims, in addition to the average of 58.51 per cent paid off as of June 30, 1939, according to a report made today by the controler of the currency.

These collections were made at a total liquidation cost of $3,942,-000, or 8.97 cents per collection dollar. The remaining 17 closed banks are being liquidated at a cost of 8.68 cents per dollar collected.

CARRIER CORP. TO VARY PAY AS PROFITS SHIFT

A new plan by which salaried employés' pay will vary up or down with the company's earnings has been adopted by Carrier corporation, J. I. Lyle, president, announced yesterday. Changes in salary will be determined on a 12 month profit or loss basis.

During the first year of the plan the provision for automatic reductions will be suspended. The program with respect to increases will become effective at once. Each month the company will compute its average net income or less for the preceding 12 months and adjust salaries on a percentage basis.

The company makes air conditioning equipment.

STEEL OUTPUT TO HOLD STEADY IN TWO AREAS

The ingot production rate of several important steel producing areas will remain unchanged this week, according to reports yesterday, altho slight fluctuations are expected in operations over the nation as a whole.

Production in the Chicago district is scheduled to start unchanged this week at 92.2 per cent of theoretical capacity, 1.9 points higher than a month ago. A year ago production was at 59.3 per cent of capacity.

Pittsburgh operations will also be unchanged at 94.5 per cent, it was reported. Production in the Youngstown district will be at 92 per cent, down one point from the 93 per cent level of a week ago.

SELECT GROUPS TO ARBITRATE STOCK DISPUTES

Exchange Seeks Prompt, Convenient Service.

Groups of business and professional men in Chicago and seven other cities were named yesterday by the New York Stock exchange to arbitrate disputes arising in connection with securities transactions involving the public. Panels of 504 business and professonal men were established in the eight cities under provisions of the exchange's recently amended constitution. More may be named later.

Fred W. Sargent, one of Chicago arbitrators.

"The purpose of organizing the exchange's arbitration facilities on a national basis is to provide prompt economical and convenient adjudication of nonmembers' claims, and to obviate the necessity of principals and witnesses appearing in New York," the announcement said. "In many instances the plan brings the arbitration facilities of the exchange to nonmembers in their own cities and, at the same time, enables the hearing of the cases by residents of those cities."

Chicago Group Named.

The list of Chicagoans who will arbitrate cases includes Walter J. Buettner, president of Linings, Inc.; Charles S. Davis, president, and Mathew Keck, secretary of the Borg-Warner corporation; John P. Dawson, Price, Waterhouse & Co.; Max Epstein, chairman, General American Transportation corporation; Eugene A. Ford, treasurer, Household Finance corporation; Arthur A. Goes, vice president, Goes Lithographing company; R. G. Knight, controler, Walgreen company; George Rossetter, certified public accountant; Fred W. Sargent, retired president of the North Western railway, and Richard Wagner, president of the Chicago corporation.

In addition, arbitrators will be selected from among the following who are engaged in the securities business: Emmet G. Barker, George E. Barnes, Francis A. Bonner, Patrick F. Buckley, George Buffington, James A. Cathcart, John F. Craddock, Harry C. Daniels, Carl J. Easterberg, John C. Evans, Barnett Faroll, A. Richard Frank, F. Fletcher Garlock, H. E. Greene, Homer P. Hargrave, E. L. Hicks Jr., Thomas E. Hosty, William C. Karlson, William D. Kerr, Herbert Levy, Arthur F. Lindley, Wentworth P. Mackenzie, Alfred W. Mansfield, M. J. O'Brien, Charles C. Renshaw, T. Clifford Rodman, Joseph A. Rushton, Paul B. Skinner, Leonard M. Spitzglass, Clarence G. Troup, and Wallace C. Winter.

Paul H. Davis to Serve.

Arbitrators will be drawn under the system adopted last year for nonmember cases in New York, except that, instead of a member of the exchange's arbitration committee, an out-of-town governor of the exchange will serve. Chicago's governor of the New York Stock exchange is Paul H. Davis, head of Paul H. Davis & Co., and a former president of the Chicago Stock exchange.

Other arbitrating groups were named in Baltimore, Boston, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Richmond, and San Francisco.

Costs of arbitration are established at maximums of $25 on amounts involving less than $500 to $120 for a hearing involving $10,000 or more. The new rules, according to the exchange, bring them into conformity with the arbitration statute of the state of New York, "principally by eliminating the right of appeal, thus facilitating an award upon which a judgment may be taken."

TVA TO EXTEND 'POWER EMPIRE'; BUYS NEW UNIT

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 2 (AP).—The Tennessee Valley authority will extend its vast "power empire" over northeast Mississippi on Dec. 15 with the $2,000,000 purchase of electric utility properties of the Mississippi Power company, a subsidiary of Commonwealth and Southern corporation.

J. A. Krug, TVA's youthful chief power engineer who aided in negotiating the $78,600,000 purchase of Commonwealth and Southern's Tennessee properties, said today a contract closing the Mississippi deal would be signed in New York.

The consummation of this sale will give the authority a virtual monopoly on the generation and transmission of electricity thruout the Tennessee valley—and is regarded as an important step in setting up the famed "yardstick" of cheap power rates.

The only move left for the authority in completing its giant power system will be the acquisition of electric properties in north Alabama owned by the Alabama Power company, another C. & S. subsidiary.

Krug said negotiations for these properties were under way.

3. The long strike which halted production at the automobile plants of Chrysler corporation and affected many other factories supplying parts for the company was brought to an end.

Chrysler Strike Costly.

The workers had lost an estimated $15,000,000 in wages and the company about $100,000,000 in sales. It was said three years will be required for employés to regain the lost pay under wage concessions which they won by the strike. Chrysler plants began calling back their 60,000 work-

COTTON

American cotton prices advanced to new seasonal high levels in the early trading yesterday. Brokers who frequently act for Bombay, India, interests were aggressive buyers of May, July and October contracts in New York. Trading volume was large, altho liberal profit taking by commission houses and hedging sales brought about a reaction from the top. Closing trades on the active deliveries were unchanged to 0.12 cent a pound higher. A sharp upturn in the price of silver in India had a drastic effect on the Bombay cotton market early in trading.

Trading in futures contracts on the nation's three organized cotton exchanges totaled 4,561,800 bales of cotton during November, the Commodity Exchange administration reported. The trading volume in October was 3,729,750 bales and in November, 1938, it was 3,455,550.

Spot cotton closed 0.02 cent lower to 0.04 cent higher with New York, 10.28 cents; New Orleans, 10.17 cents; Galveston, 9.76 cents, and Galveston at 9.75 cents a pound. Prices follow:

OAK PARK FLAT BUILDINGS SOLD FOR $450,000

Metropolitan Life Sells to Syndicate.

What is said to be the largest apartment transaction ever negotiated in Oak Park was filed for record yesterday at the county recorder's office. Three big flat buildings containing 144 suites in the western suburb were bought for investment by an Oak Park syndicate for $450,000 from the Metropolitan Life Insurance company.

Homer L. Bundy. [Toloff Photo.]

Firm to Remain Manager.

The Hemingway firm was the only broker in the transaction. It has been manager of the three properties for some years and will continue in that capacity.

The largest of the three buildings is the Fair Oaks apartments, at the southeast corner of North Oak Park avenue and Erie street. It contains 54 suites of five rooms, and stands on a 156 by 190 foot site. It was bought for $190,000, according to revenue stamps on the deed.

The 42 apartment building at 130-142 North Humphrey avenue was bought for $125,000. It has 42 suites of 2½, 3½, and 4 rooms each. It occupies a 171 by 171 foot lot.

The Oak-Rand apartments, at the southwest corner of Oak Park avenue and Randolph street, were purchased for $135,000. There are 48 suites of 2½, 3½, and 4 rooms. The building stands on a 150 by 141 foot site.

Pay $45,000 in Cash.

Three purchase money mortgages totaling $405,000, for 15 years at 4¼ per cent, were negotiated with the Metropolitan Life Insurance company. The $45,000 balance was paid in cash.

According to Bundy the three buildings, which were reported to be more than 97 per cent occupied, have had $70,000 spent in improvements during the last four years by the Metropolitan Life. Individual electric refrigerator units have been installed in all of the 144 suites during the last 60 days at a total reported cost of $12,000.

Not only is the size of yesterday's transaction outstanding but the purpose of the purchase, for investment and not speculation, is significant of the trend in the real estate market. There has been much advice given by experts in recent months that investment buying on a large scale would be worth while. This is by far the largest answering gesture on the part of investors.

The identities of the members of the syndicate, other than Bundy and Houser, were not disclosed. They are all residents of Oak Park, it was said.

TWO CORNERS IN SOUTH WABASH ARE PURCHASED

Two South Wabash avenue corners were sold last week. Ralph W. Olstead, representing a syndicate, bought the southeast intersection of Balbo avenue [formerly 7th street], adjoining the Stevens hotel, for $100,-000 according to revenue stamps on the deed. He conveyed title to the First National Bank as trustee. It will continue to be operated as a parking lot, it was said.

The eight story building at the northeast corner of Wabash and Ninth, 38 by 102 feet, was sold by William S. Jenney, vice president and general counsel for the Lackawanna railroad, to George R. Berger, of the Berger Railway Supply company. The indicated price was $36,000. Lang, Weise & Cella were brokers and will continue to manage the property.

BUYS MICHIGAN AVENUE CORNER.

The Globe Oil and Refining company yesterday bought the southwest corner of Michigan avenue and Pershing road for a reported $20,000 cash, thru Lang, Weise & Cella. The company will continue to occupy it with a filling station.

College Buys Flat Building for Dormitory

North Park college yesterday purchased the four story 24 apartment building at the southwest corner of Spaulding and Foster avenues for an undisclosed consideration. The price, however, was understood to have been in the neighborhood of $60,000. The property is 125 by 90 feet. The building, now occupied by families whose leases run until next fall, will be remodeled next September into a men's dormitory with a capacity of 100.

Algoth Ohlson.

It will accommodate men now occupying a 65 room dormitory at 3245 Foster avenue which will be remodeled into classrooms, according to President Algoth Ohlson.

The college occupies a campus on the south side of Foster avenue, between Kedzie and Spaulding avenues, which is bounded on the south by the north branch of the Chicago river. It is sponsored by the Evangelical Covenant church and has 1,200 men and women students.

Luncheon will be at 12:30 o'clock, followed by a business meeting. After the installation there will be a reception in honor of the new officials.

George F. Nixon yesterday announced a residential building program in his Golf View subdivision in Niles Center just south of the Evanston Golf club grounds.

Three houses of a contemplated 50 are under construction on Lee street, between Keeler and Kostner avenues. Graham, Anderson, Probst & White are the architects. They are all to be in the $10,000 price range, it was said, with FHA financing figured on a $57 monthly payment basis.

Nixon has opened offices for his new project at 4922 Dempster street, opposite the Dempster street, Niles Center, "L" station. He recently built and sold 26 residences, costing an average of $20,000, in his Glen Aire development near Glenview.

Cook County Takes Step to Correct Haphazard Subdivision Developments

CLAYTON SMITH URGES CHANGE IN REGULATIONS

Suggests Larger Lots as Health Measure.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Clayton F. Smith, president of the board of commissioners of Cook county, has taken steps to correct conditions harmful to the public health in areas outside of municipalities caused by too intensive building of small homes, without proper drainage and safe water supplies. At the last meeting of the county board he presented a resolution calling attention to a dangerous situation which has been developing thruout the county and urging action to rectify it.

Clayton F. Smith.

The resolution was referred to the public service committee, of which John Traeger is chairman. It may come up for action at the next meeting of the board tomorrow.

Based on Surveys.

The resolution is based on facts shown in a recent survey made by the Cook county zoning commission and the state health department. It was discovered that there are many rural areas in the county where building is going on extensively despite a lack of adequate drainage of storm water, lack of facilities for treatment of sewage, and a resulting danger of infecting or polluting the water supply.

This condition is aggravated, Smith's resolution asserted, because in certain areas the lots have been divided into units so small that wells, septic tanks and other sanitary devices cannot be placed far enough apart to guard against pollution.

To correct this condition the resolution suggests a change in the county subdivision rules to provide that lots contain a minimum of 20,000 square feet, with a frontage of at least 100 feet.

One Exception to Be Made.

The only exception would be in cases where sewage systems and water supply are certified by the state department of public health to be safe and adequate.

The resolution also sets a minimum requirement of 8,000 square feet, with a minimum of 60 feet of frontage, no matter what ruling is taken on the other facilities.

The Cook county zoning commission and the Chicago Regional Planning association were asked to make a further study of home building development in the rural areas of the county with a view to discovering how best to provide for healthful and adequate living conditions. Both bodies were invited to report to the county board when their investigations have progressed to a point where conclusions may be drawn.

FHA Rules Less Stringent.

The national housing act already has provided rules and regulations covering areas where FHA Title 1 homes in the low cost bracket are to be built. They are somewhat similar to those suggested in the Smith resolution, but are not so stringent. Where there is neither a public water supply nor a public sewer, the minimum land area for a home must be 20,000 square feet to qualify for an FHA loan.

The rapid development of small homes in Cook county areas outside of any community has been receiving attention from various civic and public bodies for several months.

A member of a federal investigating commission recently said that indiscriminate and undirected home developments outside Chicago and in the various no-man lands between suburbs was the greatest potential health menace facing any American city. He asserted that new slums were being created by this haphazard construction of small homes.

DE LUGACH BUYS 32 ACRES NEAR OAK LAWN LIMITS

The Frank De Lugach Real Estate company yesterday bought 32 acres at the southwest corner of 103d street and Central avenue for an undisclosed consideration, reported to have been all cash. The seller was Sol Hoffman. The land is just outside the southwest village limits of Oak Lawn and between that suburb and Chicago Ridge. The property is to be marketed as Central Avenue Gardens, with lots 100 by 125 and 100 by 168 feet.

Six Homes Completed in the Brainerd District

These six homes, recently completed by Healy Brothers, Inc., are all sold and occupied. They are on the east side of Aberdeen street, extending south from 90th street. They are part of 18 this firm has built this year. Their prices ranged from $6,000 to $7,500, with minimum down payments of $600 and monthly payments of $30.02. All are financed with FHA 20 and 25 year loans. A house at 8945 South Aberdeen street, in the next block north of these, is open to the public for inspection. It has been sold by Healy Brothers, but the owner will not move in until next spring.

Find Homes Under $5,000 Most Popular

Homes costing from $4,000 to $5,000 are the most popular in Chicago, according to a survey of permits issued for new single family homes during the last ten months, made by the planning department of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

Out of 1,949 new homes there were only nine costing $15,000 or more. That is 0.4 per cent of the total. There were 45 costing from $10,000 to $15,000. Following is a table showing number of homes in the less than $10,000 cost bracket:

Price range.	Homes.	Pct.
$9,000 to $10,000	31	1.6
$8,000 to $9,000	71	3.6
$7,000 to $8,000	132	6.8
$6,000 to $7,000	249	12.8
$5,000 to $6,000	453	23.2
$4,000 to $5,000	674	34.7
$3,000 to $4,000	222	11.4
Under $3,000	63	3.2

Based on another table of actual costs of homes, it was shown that 62.8 per cent of the new houses cost $5,000 or less. New homes costing from $5,100 to $9,999 were 34.4 per cent of the total. The remainder, 2.8 per cent, consisted of homes costing $10,000 or more.

LINCOLN, MELROSE CORNER SOLD FOR $167,000 CASH

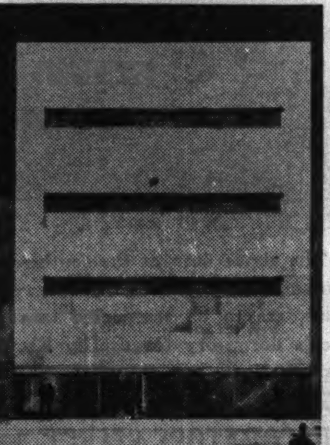
The two story fireproof Citizens State Bank building at the southwest corner of Lincoln avenue and Melrose street, 48 by 86 feet, was bought yesterday by Ben and Eugene Jaffe for investment. They paid a reported all-cash consideration of $167,000. The seller was the American National Bank and Trust company, trustee.

The buyers then negotiated a $90,000 mortgage with the Western and Southern Life Insurance company for 10 years at 4½ per cent. J. E. Ehrenhalt & Co. were the only brokers in the lease and loan negotiations, and they will manage the property.

The building was occupied for many years by the Citizens State bank. It was remodeled in 1935 at a reported cost of $35,000. The ground floor is occupied by chain stores and the entire second floor by the Metropolitan Life Insurance company.

New Business Block

(Story in column 5.)



Straus & Schram will erect the above building at 4041-45 Milwaukee avenue for the company's own use.

INSULATION FIRM EXPANDS; LEASES NORTH SIDE BLOCK

The Luse-Stevenson Company, Inc., maker of corkboard insulation and acoustical tile, with factories in Spain, Norfolk, Va., Detroit, and Chicago, has leased the two story building at 873 Blackhawk street, containing 40,000 square feet of floor space. The property covers an entire block, bounded by Blackhawk, Fremont, Eastman, and Kingsbury streets. Lang, Weise & Cella were brokers.

The company is moving its plant from 2545 South Park way to the north side. According to L. C. Luse, president, production will be increased in the new location. One floor will be used for the manufacture of acoustical and sound deadening tile, a new product for the concern. Offices of the company will be moved from the Builders building next May.

Straus Land Corporation Disposes of 9,157 Acres

The protective committee for the holders of farm loan certificates of the Straus Land corporation recently met and authorized cash distributions ranging from 1 to 9 per cent on five of the six issues. The committee consists of Chester R. Davis, vice president of the Chicago Title and Trust company; S. J. Campbell of Mount Carroll, and Kenneth Knowlton of Freeport, Ill. During the year 9,157 acres were sold for a reported consideration of $132,823.

Healy Brothers to Build More Brick Houses

Healy Brothers, Inc., who have built and sold 18 brick residences in the Brainerd area so far this year, and have more under way, yesterday announced a building program of 50 additional homes for the next year.

This firm, composed of Martin and Paul Healy, built and sold 152 brick bungalows in 1925 and 1926. They have operated on the south and northwest sides for more than 25 years.

They have three houses nearing completion on the east side of Aberdeen, between 89th and 90th streets. All have been sold. There are two more sold and awaiting action by the FHA before construction begins. The company has 50 additional home sites in the area on which they expect to build homes.

BROADWAY LEASE.

Frank Shapiro has leased the store at 4006 Broadway. He bought the fixtures from Peter G. Libby and Samuel Block and is operating a restaurant. The property is managed by the George S. Lurie company.

Brokers' Notes

Cary E. DeButts has been made sales director of the building operations of Carrothers & Braun. He is a former president of the Illinois State Association of Real Estate Boards and a director of the Chicago Real Estate Board. STRAUS-SCHRAM PLANS NEW FOUR STORY BUILDING

Straus & Schram, one of Chicago's pioneer furniture dealers, announced yesterday that they will erect a four story building at 4041-45 Milwaukee avenue, to be entirely occupied by them. It will replace their present store at 4025 Milwaukee avenue, a few doors south of the new location.

Wreckers will start at once to remove the old building now on the site. Plans are being completed and the general contract has been let. A contract for the structural steel was made in advance in order to assure early delivery. Completion is set for April 1, 1940, according to J. A. Schram, assistant secretary.

A. Epstein, Chicago engineer, and Robert Heller, industrial designer of New York City, collaborated in the development of the building plans.

The building will be completely air conditioned with an all year system. Each floor will have an individual unit. It is asserted that this will be the first time that an entire furniture store building in the Chicago area will have a comprehensive air conditioning plant.

The new store is in the heart of the Milwaukee-Cicero-Irving Park road business district, and near the new Sears-Roebuck department store at Cicero and Irving Park road.

Straus & Schram have their general offices and warehouse at 1105 West 35th street. Their loop store is at 115 South Wabash avenue. They also have branches at 836 West 63d street, 3318 Lincoln avenue, 4128 West Madison street, and at 4025 Milwaukee avenue.

When the latter store is moved to the new location next April, the building at 4025 Milwaukee will be occupied by a new Woolworth store.

Woman Pays $22,500 for 13 Flat Structure

The Sack Realty company reported the sale yesterday of the thirteen flat building at 721-29 West 71st street for the Live Stock National bank to Margaret Ewald for $22,500.

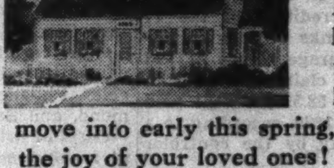
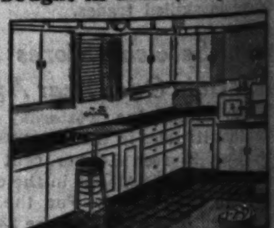
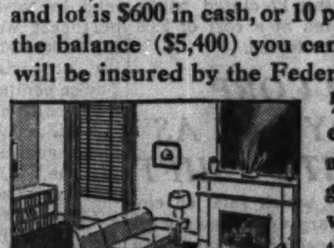
The Best Xmas Gift OF ALL!



Make this happy scene come to life in your home on Christmas morning! The wonderful, thrilling gift of plans for a new house, a home that you and your family will actually move into early this spring, is within the reach of everyone. Think of the joy of your loved ones! Think of the security, the sense of satisfaction of fulfilling a dream, the happier life that a home of your own can bring—and then, realize that this opportunity is yours today and that this is the best time to buy or build a house!

Here are the incontrovertible facts that prove the point. First, as to building costs: The house which your friend bought in 1926 (frequently spoken of as the "normal year") for $6,600 can now be duplicated down to the last inch for $6,000! And instead of a large down payment and old-fashioned burdensome first and second mortgages on which your friend has had to pay $34.00 a month in interest charges alone, all you need to purchase a $6,000 house and lot is $600 in cash, or 10 per cent. To cover the balance ($5,400) you can obtain a 4½ per cent first mortgage which will be insured by the Federal Housing Administration for an additional ½ of 1 per cent. The important thing, however, is that your monthly payments will amount to only $39.00 and will include mortgage repayment, fire insurance and taxes, as well as interest—and at the end of 25 years the home will be yours free and clear!





And, too, despite the fact that your home costs less than your friend's did in 1926, it will be better planned, better built, easier to heat, better equipped, better looking, and will be inspected and approved by the FHA.

This Christmas is the time to start, and Hines is here to help you give your family the best Christmas gift of all—a new home. Get in touch with Hines, your architect or your builder this week and arrange to give your family the surprise and thrill of a lifetime!

LIKE MR. CHIPS, TEACHER CAN'T COUNT CHILDREN

But They'll All Be at Her Party.

BY RITA FITZPATRICK.

"Like Mr. Chips, I can say that I have hundreds and hundreds of children," remarked Miss Josephine Ford last week as she talked over plans for a get-together banquet and reception which will be held in her honor Saturday evening by the alumni of Nathanael Greene grammar school in the Piccadilly tea room, 410 South Michigan avenue.

Miss Josephine Ford.
[Wolk Studio.]

The whimsicality of her statement was not sentimental, but gently humorous, for Miss Ford chuckles at her own remarkable memory. When by some chance meeting she sees an old pupil who sat in the back row of her eighth grade class 40 years ago in the old Brighton [Greene] school, she immediately looks to see if the cowlick still waves belligerently on top of his head or whether his fingernails are still "in mourning for a cat."

She Doesn't Forget.

"I can't help it," she murmurs. "I have watched children for so many years that I never forget their little habits. I can remember those who found grammar to be a mystery and those who excelled in it. I recollect little tricks and fine displays of sportsmanship. And when I meet my former pupils, I always realize the truth of that old statement that 'the boy is father of the man.'"

Miss Ford was a teacher in the Greene school for more than 40 years. At her retirement in 1931 as assistant principal, the alumni established a school library as a tribute to her. "They knew it was the one gift I wanted," she says.

Several times a month Miss Ford makes a trip from her apartment in the Plaisance hotel, 60th street and Stony Island, to the Greene library, 2317 Paulina street, and arranges the new books or checks over the list of old ones.

Clings to the Old.

She lingers longest over Tennyson, Dickens, and Shakespeare, for, as she admits, she clings longest to old and well loved things. That does not deter this bright, blue eyed woman, however, from listening to the latest war news on the radio and from her afternoon jaunts to the Art institute for a new exhibit.

"On other afternoons I visit old school friends. They come the nearest, now that I am alone, to being my family." Every other Friday finds her at the Arche club for a lecture or a fine musical program. "I have known youth too long to grow old," she ventures in a voice which fondles the English language.

That same disciplined diction will come to her advantage Saturday evening when she is called upon as the special guest to make a talk.

Many Send Messages.

Messages from all parts of the United States and from Canada are being received from former students who, tho being unable to attend the reunion, wish to greet Miss Ford and their former classmates. Some are journeying to Chicago especially. They include Johnny Burke, Hollywood song writer; Mrs. Gertrude Baker Fair and Mrs. Ruth Palmberg Thomsen of California, and Robert McClements, general manager of Lewis Packing company at Omaha, Neb.

William J. McKay, 8227 Peoria street, will be toastmaster at the 6:30 o'clock banquet and later, with the aid of the entertainment committee, will present Santa Claus, a Christmas tree, and gifts for all the guests. There will be dancing and cards.

Participating on the committee will be Miss Mary Blyth, Capt. John Prendergast of the police commissioners' office; Patrick Joyce, president of the Chicago and Great Western railroad; Mrs. Ellen Gallagher of the Greene school; James B. McCahey, president of the board of education; Miss Anna Palmberg; Col. Leo Ahern of the United States army; Joseph Hector, William Cooney, chairman, and George Barry.

Aiding on Committee.

South and southwest side men and women who will aid the committee are Miss Alma Frederickson, William Elliott, James Elliott, Mrs. H. A. Upton, Dr. Alfred Gareiss, Frank Long, George King, John O'Keefe, William J. McKay, Michael O'Connor, M. J. Barry.

Mrs. Henry Dooner, Mrs. Maude Brown, Mr. and Mrs. William Fyffe, Mrs. Michael Haberkorn, Richard Barry, Mr. and Mrs. George Billings, Mrs. William Reed, Miss Florence Richards, and Miss Miss Margaret Powers.

Have Roles in Comedy

Women's wiles are eternal, so Oliver Goldsmith's drama, "She Stoops to Conquer," never grows old. At Lindblom High school, 6130 Wolcott avenue, the boys and girls are having as much fun in producing this classic comedy as if it were written yesterday. The performance will be offered to the public Thursday and Friday evenings in the school auditorium. Taking important roles will be (left to right) Betty Kosak as Mrs. Hardcastle, the managing "mamma"; Bill Langbauer, who is getting in some early practice at being debonair as the handsome George Hastings, and Madeleine Hinich, the heroine, Kate Hardcastle, who uses shrewdness to guarantee romance. The school band and orchestra's annual concert will be held in conjunction with the play Thursday evening under the direction of James A. Thatcher, orchestra, leader, and Capt. William Morris, band conductor.

She has composed music since 1902 and is connected with several musical organizations, including the Illinois Academy of Fine Arts, the National Federation of Music Clubs, the Musicians Club of Women, the Chicago Women's Musical club, and the Society for Promotion of American Music.

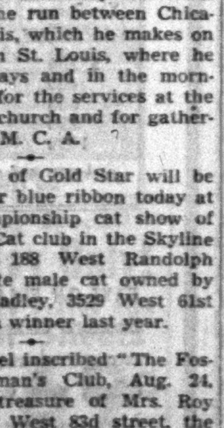
Paragraphs About People You May Know

IN a Chicago pawn shop window an unusual violin caught the eye of Belden Briscoe, 67, 6414 Emerald avenue, about 10 years ago. Since fiddle playing had been his hobby ever since he was 17, he walked in to price the instrument. The proprietor assured him it was a genuine Stainer, a famous German make worth about $500. Mr. Briscoe bought the ancient instrument. A few days later he had it examined by a well known violin expert, who exclaimed: "Man, you haven't got a Stainer! This is a rare Amati, made by Nicholas Amati in 1727 in Cremona, Italy. Its value is about $2,800."



Belden Briscoe and $2,800 find.

Mr. Briscoe, now finishing his 34th year as brakeman for the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railway company, has made good use of his treasure. Ever since he acquired it he has been soloist on Wednesday evenings at the Methodist Episcopal church, 64th and Paulina streets. He always carries it with him on the run between Chicago and St. Louis, which he makes on the Zipper. In St. Louis, where he lands on Sundays and in the mornings, he plays for the services at the Gospel Center church and for gatherings in the Y. M. C. A.

King Carrell of Gold Star will be seeking another blue ribbon today at the 30th championship cat show of the Beresford Cat club in the Skyline Athletic club, 188 West Randolph street. A white male cat owned by Mrs. W. N. Hadley, 3529 West 61st street, he was a winner last year.

An ivory gavel inscribed "The Foster Park Woman's Club, Aug. 24, 1939" is the treasure of Mrs. Roy Beckman, 1527 West 83d street, the president. Mrs. Walter Morris, 8400 Ashland avenue, presented it at the last meeting. The date is significant, marking the time of the founding of the organization.

Mrs. Harry L. Halverson, 12120 Harvard avenue, and Mrs. R. H. Mabey, 11745 Wallace street, make up one-third of the executive group of the newly organized Chicago unit of the National Association of Doll and Toy Collectors.

Foster Park Woman's club, newly organized civic group, will tour a furniture company, 63d and Halsted streets, Wednesday afternoon. Members will meet at the store at 1:15 o'clock. Door prizes will be given.

Dr. Edward Lodge Curran, president of the International Catholic Truth society, will speak tomorrow night at Leo XIII club, 820 West Garfield boulevard. Dr. Curran's subject will be "Crusade for Peace." The meeting is sponsored by St. Thomas Aquinas council of the Knights of Columbus.

TRAFFIC CLUB'S GOOD FELLOWS AWAITING RALLY

Y's and Scouts Also Back Campaign.

The Traffic Club of Chicago, one of the loyal boosters of the Good Fellow campaign each year, will push this year's drive a giant stride ahead with its fourth annual luncheon Tuesday noon in the grand ballroom of the Palmer House.

Proceeds from this luncheon, which has been sold out at 1,040 plates, will bring Christmas cheer to 1,750 poor children who otherwise might find an empty stocking. Last year the club distributed 325 baskets to needy families, and at 9 o'clock, Dec. 23, it will take 350 from the Chicago Tunnel company warehouse, 754 West Jackson boulevard.

Bishop Waldorf to Speak.

Bishop Ernest Lynn Waldorf will make the principal address on "Good Fellows All" at the luncheon. Celebrities who will present the entertainment include William Gaxton and Victor Moore, members of the cast of "Leave It To Me"; the Old Heidelberg octet; Joe Lewis; Tamara, entertainer from the Chez Paree; Edward Everett Horton, star of "Springtime for Henry"; Maple City Four from station WLS; Martin Marshall, magician; Hap Hazard, acrobat; Betty Lee, xylophonist; novelty trio from the Stevens hotel; Margaret Libbe, vocalist, and an opera star. Philip Maxwell of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE staff will be master of ceremonies.

As head of the public affairs committee of the club, L. H. McCormick is chairman of the luncheon, assisted by A. H. Schweitert, third vice president, who was the chairman for three years. Lee J. Quasey is the secretary. John Middleton has charge of obtaining the toys for the baskets; F. J. Wasson of basket delivery, and A. W. Wilkins of purchasing.

Others On Committee.

Other members of the Traffic club public affairs committee which has charge of the luncheon are R. F. Ahrens, R. H. Baird, J. W. Bingham, J. D. Brandon, E. S. Buckmaster, C. T. Collett, W. D. Cornell, W. W. Dixon, J. L. Keeshin, M. H. Kennelly, M. E. Kienappel, Herman F. Mueller, S. J. Owens, and Luther M. Walter.

Chairmen representing the various groups of the club are S. L. Felton, shippers; R. J. Schilling, coöperating; J. S. Hackett, forwarders; Lewis W. King, airways; Mr. Buckmaster, express; George A. Julin, warehousemen; Walter Mullady, highway; Tom J. Wall, railroad; C. D. Perrin, publishers, and Mr. Kienappel, waterway.

Three classifications of Good Fellows have been set up this year. The first retains the original idea in which the Good Fellow obtains the name of an accredited poor family from the bureau, 1 South Dearborn street, and delivers a basket prepared by himself. The second is the general Good Fellow—one who sends one dollar or more to the campaign headquarters, Tribune Tower.

For Club Donations.

The third has been arranged for the commercial or business organization or the community club. The participating group submits to the Good Fellow fund the equivalent of $1 a member and agrees to distribute baskets. For this total, THE TRIBUNE will deliver the baskets to it four or five days before Christmas. These the members will give to needy families of their own choosing if they desire. Otherwise they may obtain names from the Good Fellow bureau.

Representatives of south side Y. M. C. A. units met last week to consider uniting their Christmas activities under the campaign. All expressed approval of the idea, and will confer with their individual groups as to the manner of participating.

Those who attended the session were C. C. Lane, executive secretary, and Wilber Means, assistant business secretary of the Hyde Park "Y"; William T. Rowe, executive secretary of the South Chicago "Y"; Jack Kavannaugh, educational secretary, and James Wilson, service secretary of the Englewood "Y"; Andy Reid, executive secretary of the South Shore "Y"; Jack Bauer, executive secretary, and Albert A. Worth of the 111th Street "Y."

Boy to Address C. of C.

George Gagerman, a member of the Boys' Brotherhood Republic, will explain the benefits and cheer of the Good Fellow campaign to the members of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce at 7:45 o'clock Monday, Dec. 11, at 2412 East 75th street. They will discuss participation.

A. A. Kirk, director of field service for the Chicago Boy Scouts, said recently that he hoped the Scouts would not only become junior Good Fellows by contributing 25 cents to the fund, but would deliver baskets also as they do at Thanksgiving.

Another leader expressing approval, Hymie Ditkowski, former president of the National Association of Cleaners and Dyers, said: "The Good Fellow campaign is a worthy cause. I hope scores of cleaning and dying establishments in Chicago join in this movement." Carl Stockholm will communicate with the various organizations, seeking their coöperation.

Halas to Speak.

Two other events which have been scheduled to boost the campaign are a radio speech by George Halas, owner of the Chicago Bears professional

In Social Limelight

MISS ADELAIDE MAJEWSKI.

Holiday time is ushering in a social season out on the southwest side. Chicago Teachers' college, 68th street and Stewart avenue, will have its annual sophomore cotillion Friday evening in the Skyline Athletic club. Miss Jean Walsh, a sophomore, is a member of the committee.

Miss Adelaide Majewski, 5132 Carpenter street, is among the De Paul co-eds sewing calico tigers, gingham lions, and serge elephants for a bazar Saturday to benefit the De Paul University Day nursery, 2145 North Halsted street. The bazar will be held at the nursery.

St. Rita's senior sodality will hold its snowball frolic Friday evening in the parish auditorium, 63d street and Washtenaw avenue. Miss Virginia Jordan, 6216 Francisco avenue, is on the committee.

STREETS GAILY DECORATED FOR EARLY BUYERS

Merchants See Busy Yule Season.

Christmas is not just Dec. 25. It is festooned streets and tinseled windows, crowds of shoppers, and prosperous pocketbooks. It is the thin Salvation Army Santa Claus on the corner and the fat, optimistic one in the local department store. Christmas is days of chimes and carolers, evergreens, and eagerness.

So Christmas is on the southwest side. It came at the invitation of local merchants last week on the heels of the Thanksgiving gobbler. On some corners it arrived with Santa Claus in a sleek limousine and in other quieter quarters with the holly in the grocery window.

Shoppers with large budgets are opening their purses with a grander gesture than in former years, while others with meager funds are taking advantage of the holiday sales being offered in their neighborhoods.

Harvey to Have Tree.

In Harvey a giant Christmas tree with hundreds of colored lights will cast a silhouette on the city hall. For four days before the holiday carolers from the various churches in the village will sing over a loud speaking system from the hall. Residents will vie in a contest being sponsored by the merchants for the best home exterior decorations. Fifteen prizes will be awarded, the judging to be done by the Harvey Woman's club.

James Berry, secretary of the village business men's association, announced that 35 strings of natural pine boughs had been festooned thru the four and a half blocks in the shopping district. Alternating boughs boast of a wreath or a Santa Claus pennant.

"Shoppers are already thronging the streets and evidently finding what they want in our heavily stocked stores," said Mr. Berry. "The shops will begin to stay open every evening until 9:30 o'clock a week before Christmas."

Plan Christmas Party.

In the neighboring village of Homewood there will be another large tree to brighten the center of town. About a week before Christmas the Rotary club, in conjunction with other civic groups, will hold a Christmas party beneath the tree and will distribute gifts and candy to the children.

According to Frank Cowing, village attorney and chairman of the classification committee for the Rotary club, Christmas shopping is expected to hit a new high with the opening of a new block of stores at Ridge road between the Dixie highway and Martin avenue.

"Sixty families have moved into the town within the last year, which probably accounts for the increase of shoppers on the streets," he said. "The stores have already begun to stay open on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, and will have nightly shopping the week before Christmas."

Joliet Buying Better.

In Joliet, E. J. Meyer, a furrier and chairman of the retail division for the association of commerce, has good reason to know that residents are shopping early and buying more expensive items this season.

"Their fatter pocketbooks have caused the merchants to improve their stocks this year," he said. "Our holiday season opened Nov. 25, and two days later our streets were decorated with balsam boughs and sprays of blue lights."

Wandering carolers from the various churches in Joliet will stroll the streets the week before Christmas under the sponsorship of the association. Special sales will be conducted, and store windows will attract attention with animated toylands. Dr. B. G. Wilcox is president of the association.

Archway of Banners.

Last week the business district in the Town of Lake, from 46th to 51st street on Ashland avenue, and from Paulina to Justine streets on 47th, became an archway of Christmas banners and patriotic colors. Because it is a heavily populated area, the stores opened for evening shopping on Nov. 21, and promotion sales have already been advertised.

Fred F. Kieker, secretary of the Town of Lake Chamber of Commerce, stated last week that the business men will sponsor Christmas carols sung in various languages daily from 3 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon and from 7 to 9 o'clock in the evening from a loud speaker at the Drovers' bank. The singing will continue all day on Saturdays.

"Out here our people began to shop two weeks ago," he says.

Santa Claus arrived in the modern manner by automobile on Nov. 24 at the busy intersection of 63d and Halsted streets, the southwest side's little downtown. He attracted 3,000 mothers and children, and announced that a gift hunt was on in all the stores managed by members of the Englewood Business Men's association. Children accompanied by their parents will be allowed to scurry thru the stores looking for these specific gifts until the last one is found.

Special sales began the day after Thanksgiving and fine values are being offered, according to Fred Rathje, vice president of the Chicago City Bank and Trust company and THOUGHTS OF AN OFFICIAL.

Well, I will soon be completing my year as an official of an improvement association and the experience has given me a new slant on things. At the time of my election I was flattered by the homage of my neighbors because I was new in the community, but as time went by I realized that it was the type of honor that often goes begging.

When the glamor of the election night banquet had died down I found that if I was to fulfill my duties properly it would take a good deal of my time. My only recompense has been a personal satisfaction in doing my best. It is not an easy task to conduct a membership campaign in such an organization. There are always those who criticize, and there is a suspicion that one who devotes his time for community betterment must have in mind running for office.

I am convinced that a nonpolitical community organization is essential. There is no lack of problems for a detached and unselfish group to consider. Unfortunately, appointed leaders are not always given the support they deserve. I am told that the success of an improvement group depends on the personality of its leadership, but after a time there comes a feeling on the part of said leaders that they are being made the goats.

Yet, when all is said and done, I am glad that I accepted this year's responsibilities. The office has given me a better acquaintance among my neighbors with whom I expect to spend the rest of my days. Certainly I have learned a lot about parliamentary procedure. Furthermore, I shall not be so quick in the future to pick flaws in those who take the initiative. More than ever, I am convinced, that an improvement association fills a real need. O. S. F.

LIKES DECORATED HOMES.

Last Christmas as my husband and I drove thru the southwest suburbs, Harvey, Homewood, Flossmoor, and others, we saw many exteriors of homes decorated beautifully in the holiday fashion. Natural firs were sprinkled with colored lights and many homeowners were ingenious in the use of pasteboard reindeers and Santa Clauses. I understand that something of the same trend is done out in Beverly Hills, but not in any other section of the district. Why doesn't THE TRIBUNE urge all residents in the city to do some holiday decoration on the outside of their houses? Perhaps next season the parks could sponsor a contest for the most beautifully decorated homes. A SOUTHWEST SIDER.

WANTS SAFETY ISLANDS.

As a citizen of the 14th ward, residing at 4915 South Ashland avenue, I am writing to you to help me in getting safety islands for street car passengers at 49th street and South Ashland avenue.

A new viaduct has been completed lately and when passengers are boarding street cars many a time it is a question of inches when a man, woman, or child is not killed by a reckless automobilist. The safety islands are very necessary. S. E. BASINSKI.

FENGER HIGH SCHOOL CHAMPION GRID TEAM TO BE ENTERTAINED

The Kiwanis Club of Roseland will again entertain the champion Fenger High school football team Tuesday noon at the Calumet Commercial club, 113th street and Prairie avenue. John J. Schommer, well known Big Ten football official, will be guest speaker. Mr. Schommer is director of physical education and director of placement at Armour Institute of Technology. He will be introduced by Racine Thompson, president of the club and toastmaster for the day.

John Schommer.

Guests will include Prof. Urgan G. Willis and Coach Jack Cummings of Pullman Technical High school; James Smith, principal of Fenger; Capt. Romaine Goudie of the Kensington police station; Sheldon W. Govier, and August Pritzlaff.

JOLIET PRESENTS COLD SHOULDER TO NEIGHBORS

Annexation Defeat Means "No Fire Calls."

Joliet city, which extended the hand of friendship to its eastern neighbors prior to an annexation proposal that was voted down, 1,169 to 942, on Nov. 21, is now giving them the cold shoulder.

The Joliet council voted last week to discontinue letting the city's fire department answer calls in unincorporated Joliet township territory until the township posts $5,000 to guarantee that the city will be reimbursed for such calls.

Most of the territory to the east, whose voters rejected the bid to join Joliet and enjoy the full benefits of city government, lies within Joliet township. Thus it appears that the city is now undertaking to penalize these residents for their adverse verdict at the polls.

Pre-voting Arguments.

It was recalled that one of the arguments employed by proponents of the annexation plan was that the incoming neighbors, if they decided to join the city, would get fire protection and other services not ordinarily provided in unincorporated areas, such as garbage collection and police protection. This fire protection would bring lower fire insurance costs to home owners in the incoming territory, the annexationists declared.

Mayor George T. Jones cited the aldermen figures on fire department costs before they voted unanimously to charge the township for fire protection.

The average cost per run of the Joliet department last year was $260.73, he said. But because the township derives 64 per cent of its revenue from taxes paid on property within the city, the township should actually pay $274.33 a call if the city is to break even, Mayor Jones said.

"It would be unfair," he said, "for the city taxpayers to continue providing protection for people who will not share in the expenses of the fire department.

Scope of Rule.

Strict enforcement of the new council order will mean that the Joliet department cannot henceforth pour water on any fire not within the city limits. Hospitals, churches, orphanages and industries are exempted from the rule.

Industries were included in the exemptions after it was pointed out that the city would be "biting off its nose to spite its face" if it allowed a neighboring industry to burn, inasmuch as the industry pays salaries to a large number of Joliet residents.

Heads of several large industries in the unincorporated area to the east of Joliet were among those who advocated annexation.

Denial by Officials.

City officials denied that the new order was in reprisal for annexation's defeat on Nov. 21. They argued that the city took no part in the campaign to bring adjoining territory into the corporate limits. This work was done by the Greater Joliet committee, a group composed of civic leaders.

In some quarters the new regulation was interpreted as a step in a new drive to convince the voters to the eastward of the wisdom of becoming Joliet citizens. The annexationists have declared that their plan was defeated by the lethargy of those who favored joining but were too indifferent to visit the polls.

The total vote of 2,111 cast in the annexation referendum is only about two-thirds of the estimated voting strength of 3,300 the area is estimated to have.

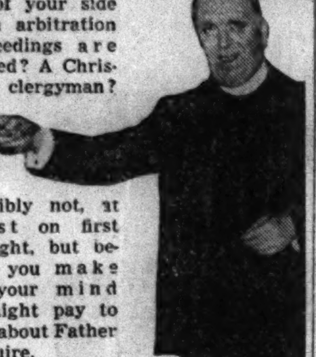
News and Queries Within and Without the Church —A Religious Voice of the People— Edited by the Rev. John Evans

If you should have a strike on your hands, whom would you trust to represent the interest of your side when arbitration proceedings are opened? A Christian clergyman?



Father Maguire addressing strikers.

Possibly not, at least on first thought, but before you make up your mind it might pay to read about Father Maguire.

During the last quarter of a century this Viatorian father has successfully arbitrated 86 serious labor disputes.

His full name is the Rev. John W. R. Maguire, and he now resides at Manhattan, Ill. Altho this Illinois town does not make a very large spot on the map of the United States, yet for years the United States department of labor has known where to find Father Maguire when an able arbitrator has been needed to solve a heavily gnarled labor problem.

Files of clippings in greater metropolitan newspapers record Father Maguire's strike settlements over the years. Last year, Father Maguire assailed Fascism and communism in a speech at the University of Chicago. "Both are supremely evil," he declared.

For many years Father Maguire was professor of sociology and later president of the former St. Viator college, Bourbonnais. Now he comes to the silver jubilee of his ordination to the Catholic priesthood. It will not go unnoticed because on Wednesday night in the ballroom of the Palmer House leaders of both industry and labor will gather 1,500 strong to pay tribute to Father Maguire as one who has been among the foremost of their arbitrators when disagreements have arisen. From Washington, D. C., the Rt. Rev. Msgr. John A. Ryan, head of the National Catholic Welfare conference, will come to deliver the principal encomium. Patrick Sullivan, president of the Chicago Building Trades council, is chairman of the Maguire dinner committee. John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and Reuben Soderstrom, head of the Illinois Labor federation, are among members of the dinner committee.

From Alfred C. Crawford, head layman of the Rock River annual conference of the Methodist church:

"We of Trinity Methodist church, 9848 Winchester avenue, think it is quite a record to have 64 of our young people in 32 colleges and universities."

So does Narthex and Byway! [Trinity church annually publishes a pamphlet giving collegiate addresses of all student members. The spread is from Vassar at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to the University of Montana at Missoula.]

GOOD FELLOWSHIP NOTES.

The thirty year rectorate at the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, La Salle and Elm streets, is being celebrated by the Rev. Dr. William B. Stoskopf and hundreds of his friends today. A luncheon in Dr. Stoskopf's honor will follow the solemn high mass this morning when representatives of many churches over a wide area will be present.

"This church seeks to make religion as intelligent as science, as appealing as art, as vital as the day's work, as intimate as the home, and as inspiring as love." Motto of University Church of the Disciples, Dr. Edward Scribner Ames, pastor.

SUNDAY EVENING CLUB PLAYS HOST TONIGHT TO 4-H CLUB YOUTHS

Youth of America will throng both platform and auditorium at the meetings of the Sunday Evening club tonight in Orchestra hall. Welcomed by Edward Foss Wilson, a trustee of the club, more than a thousand boys and girls of the 4-H club, from every state in the Union, will take charge of the program at the 7 o'clock gathering.

Dr. Lynn Harold Hough.

Accompanied by their official band from Shawnee county, Kansas, under the direction of Walter Pence, these young people will sing their songs of field and home, copies of which will be handed to the congregation with an invitation to join in. An address by Wayne Thorndyke of Alfalfa county, Kansas, a delegate to this young people's congress of the International live stock show, is the feature of the preliminary meeting.

The balcony has been set aside at the 8 o'clock meeting for these representatives. Clifford W. Barnes, president of the club, will recognize the guests with a brief foreword, and then introduce the speaker of the main service, the Rev. Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, former president of Northwestern university, now dean of Drew Theological seminary, Madison, N. J. Dr. Hough's topic will be "Escape from Flatlands."

The music at this meeting, and for succeeding meetings until New Year, will sound the note of the season. Tonight Edgar Nelson will conduct the club's choir of 125 voices in "Glorify and Praise the Lord" by Robert Yale Smith. Mr. Smith is the club's piano accompanist and this anthem records its first performance.

YULE SHOPPERS START BUYING ON S. WEST SIDE

Merchants Expect Sharp Gain in Trade.

president of the business association. "Merry Christmas" flags and placards festoon the streets from Morgan street to Lowe avenue on 63d street, and from 60th to 67th streets on Halsted.

Lights on Poles.

Two Christmas trees light up each telephone pole in Roseland, from 109th to 115th streets on Michigan avenue, and Christmas carols are heard each day over a loud speaking system. Shopping has already begun due to the increased employment in the neighboring industrial plants. Wearing apparel is a popular gift choice.

The Roseland Business Men's association, under the presidency of William Jensen, and the South End Chamber of Commerce, with William J. Venning, worked in coöperation on the street decorations. Members of the chamber of commerce also coöperate with the business association in its annual Christmas basket fund. Under the chairmanship of William Chapman, it is expected $1,000 worth of foodstuffs will be distributed among the needy families this Christmas.

G. W. Fleischmann, president of the 119th Street Business Men's association, announced last week that street decorations consisting of Christmas trees against the telephone poles will go up next week-end and stores will extend their hours until 9:30 o'clock in the evening on Friday. Special Christmas sales are attracting early shoppers and all the merchants declare that their stores are more heavily stocked.

Party for Children.

Merchants will put up their own Christmas decorations in Roseland, but the Brainerd Business Men's association will promote the holiday season with a party for the children of the neighborhood. Santa Claus will be present.

Last year the party was held in an empty store but this season business has taken all available space. B. F. Cauble, president of the association, states that the stores opened for evening shopping last Friday.

For the benefit of the Gresham Business Men's association's Christmas basket fund, "Broken Dishes," a comedy, was staged last Friday evening by the Helen Tolson Players in Ridge park fieldhouse. Fifty baskets, valued at $3.50 each, are to be given away, and according to Herbert Tech, president of the association, the merchants will take care of any other charitable needs that are called to their attention.

Shopping began early in the district and most of the stores on 87th street from Morgan street to Vincennes avenue have decorated their windows.

Stores Are Decorated.

Flags on the trolley wires and uniform decorations in all store windows herald the Christmas season in Ogden Hill. The decorations were arranged by the business men's association under the presidency of Earl Hedeen.

Residents are purchasing more expensive items, such as furniture and jewelry, according to the statistics and increased business is expected with the opening of holiday sales on Dec. 11. The stores will stay open during the evenings also beginning on that date. Baskets will be given to the poor by the merchants.

"With the steel mills adjacent to us running a heavier schedule and employing more men, there is more money in circulation in our district," said James H. Ryan, president of the 95th Street Business Men's Improvement association. "The stores are more heavily stocked and the people are shopping early for such items as serviceable wearing apparel. Each store will put up its own decorations and this Friday the evening shopping will start."

Plan Benefit Movie.

In Brighton Park, the chamber of commerce, in coöperation with the local theater and the women's groups from the churches, annually sponsor a benefit movie at which the admission is an article of food. This year the show will be held on Dec. 21 and merchants will send their contributions to the theater lobby. The women from the churches will arrange the baskets and distribute them to needy families. Last year 350 were given away.

Walter Wolf, president of the Brighton Park Chamber of Commerce, anticipates heavier Christmas shopping. Altho the people are not buying early, due to the mild weather, he finds that more valuable articles are being sold. Shopping will be stimulated in the district by Christmas carols.

Next Saturday, street decorations consisting of five foot high chimneys stuffed with stocky, wooden Santa Clauses will be installed on all lamp posts. Red and green flags will be hung on both sides of the chimneys. Christmas sales will begin Dec. 14 and the stores will have 10 o'clock evening hours.

Hang Up Wreaths.

Uniform wreaths, emblazoning the name of the Highland District Business association, are being hung in the stores along Ashland avenue near 79th street. Late hours were announced by the stores last Friday evening and special holiday sales are advertised by many merchants.

According to William J. Blutcher, president of the association and real estate man, residents are shopping in the district early and taking advantage of the heavily stocked stores. There are no vacant stores in the area, as there were last season.

Thirty baskets will be given to needy families by the Ashland Avenue Business Men's association, announced J. R. Raymond, secretary, last week. Purchases are exceeding last year's record and increased inventories are prompting special holiday sales. All Christmas decorations are done by the individual merchants.

Because the business district is divided into four sections, the Beverly Commercial association will not decorate the streets this year. The 70 merchants in the 15 year old association are enthusiastic, however, in festooning their windows and people have already begun their holiday shopping. According to Arthur A. Baer, president, business is heavier than last year at the same time.

HAZELCREST CIVIC GROUP NAMES FIRST STAFF OF OFFICERS

The newly organized Hazelcrest Improvement association will hold its second meeting Wednesday evening, Dec. 13, in the village hall. The group was organized recently at a meeting of property owners in the Warren Palm school and a constitution and by-laws were drawn up. Officers elected are Leroy Massey, president; John Anderson, vice president; Mrs. Robert Kraemer, secretary; Mrs. Harry Shigley, assistant secretary, and Al Kelken, treasurer. The association will be nonpolitical and nonsectarian. All residents are invited to become members.

Look Over Toys for Needy

Boys always get a thrill out of a shiny automobile with a motor that starts with the twist of a key, or a miniature train or model tractor. Remembering their own Christmas mornings not so far gone by, leaders in the city's transportation system, all members of the Traffic Club of Chicago, have signed up as Good Fellows in the Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., campaign.

RIDGE ART GROUP TO SEE REVIEW OF CITY GROWTH

The growth of Chicago from an Indian trading post to one of the greatest cities in the world will be dramatized by Margaret Selleck, artist-lecturer, at the December exhibition and tea of the Ridge Art association this afternoon in Ridge park fieldhouse, 96th street and Longwood drive.

Mrs. Selleck will use her own paintings to depict six periods in Chicago's history and each period will be represented by a member costumed as the "Miss Chicago" of her day. Acting as the models will be Miss Virginia Kunza, Mrs. Russell Anderson, Miss Mabel Hama, Mrs. F. L. De Beukelaer, Mrs. Margaret Palmer, and Mrs. John S. Douglas. Mrs. Selleck will wear a costume of the civil war.

Paintings of members will also be on exhibit. Mrs. R. R. Robertson is president of the association. Tea will be served in the library after the program by Mrs. I. W. Meridith, hospitality chairman, and her committee.

SAFETY ADDRESS SCHEDULED FOR TUESDAY NIGHT

The southwest group of the Greater Chicago Safety council will hold the second of a series of five monthly industrial safety meetings Tuesday evening in the auditorium of Englewood High school, 6201 Stewart avenue.

Max Howarth, director of personnel relations for the Teletype corporation, will speak on "Men and Moods." Prior to his talk the G. H. Hammond company will furnish a program of entertainment.

Presiding at the meeting will be L. B. Whitmarsh, general superintendent of the Hammond company.

ALEC TEMPLETON INVENTS 15 NOTE MUSICAL SCALE

Tunes Zither to It; Writes Special Songs.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

News and notes:

Alec Templeton, the blind piano wizard, has perfected a 15 tone musical scale. He has an old zither which he has tuned to his new scale. When he finds time he composes tunes for it. They are said to have a pronounced oriental flavor.

Two Templeton tunes are in the news. His "Mendelssohn Mows 'Em Down" [a swing adaptation of portions of "Midsummer Night's Dream"], will be featured in a new Broadway musical, "Swingin' the Dream." His other new song, "A Ten Dollar Raise," made a hit with listeners when he introduced it on his Monday evening NBC show recently.

Animal Notes in Music.

There has been many a zoölogical note on the hit parade since Saxie Dowell's "Three Little Fishies." The newest are "The Cats and the Fiddle," "Parade of the Little White Mice," and "The Little Red Fox."

Several orchestra leaders are saying that swing is on the wing. Among these are Wayne King, who has been packing them in at the Drake [Buddy Rogers has now replaced him], and Harold Stokes, WGN dance orchestra leader. They both hold the view that the sweet music, which they expect to replace swing, will be sprightlier than in the past. And Stokes expects it to be more sophisticated.

Kate Smith has begun a drive to collect dolls for distribution to the poor, at Christmas. Last year's haul was over 18,000. . . . Lillian Cornell, former NBC Chicago songstress, is getting up before dawn each morning in Hollywood. She is at work on the new Jack Benny picture, "Buck Benny Rides Again." . . . Clark Gable will make a guest appearance on the Silver theater on Friday, Dec. 10.

A Spark Plug Missing.

The Hoosier Hot Shots for the first time in five years are operating with a cylinder missing. Gabe Ward, tenor and clarinet player, is recovering from an appendectomy. . . . Mark Love, City Opera and W-G-N basso, will sing "The Messiah" for the 400th time on Dec. 19 when he appears with the New York Oratorio society at Carnegie hall. . . . Bob Hawk, former W-G-N comedian, was in town for a few days. He headlines Mutual's show, "Name Three," in New York. . . . The Human Adventure dramatic series of the University of Chicago will be brought back to CBS before the end of the year.

Kay Kyser will take an important part in the première of "Gone with the Wind" at Atlanta, Ga., late this month. He is to act as host at a dance to be given for headliners of the movie—Clark Gable, Vivien Leigh, Ona Munson, Leslie Howard, Olivia De Havilland. and others.

Busse on W-G-N Show.

Henry Busse and his orchestra will occupy the bandstand on W-G-N-Mutual's "Show of the Week" from 5:30 to 6 p. m. today following a succession of the ace bandsmen of the airwaves.

WALLISER TELLS HOW TO PREPARE FOR RADIO WORK

Urges Experience First in Minor Leagues.

"How can I get a job as a radio actor?"

This is one of the most frequent questions asked members of the W-G-N-Mutual producing staff. An answer was given the other day by Blair Walliser, a veteran member of the department.

First of all, he said, an aspirant should get a good education—a college education if possible. The reason that this is necessary, Walliser said, is because it will give the actor the background to put an intelligent characterization into his parts.

Experience Is Necessary.

Secondly, Walliser stated, the young man or woman who wants to be an actor should get several years of experience in stock companies or with small radio stations thruout the country before applying to the major stations and networks for jobs.

"There are so many experienced actors and actresses in the business today," he said, "that it is almost mandatory that the newcomer acquire a backlog of actual acting experience before attempting to 'go places' in the big leagues."

It's a Crowded Field.

There are more actors today than at any time in radio, stage, and movie history, Walliser said, and, therefore, only the exceptional person gets to the top. This is something young people should remember when considering their choice of a career, he said.

Acting auditions are held at W-G-N regularly for those who want to display their histrionic ability.

Walliser directs production of "The Guilty Bystanders," Bob Becker's Dog Chats, "The Romance of Helen Trent," and "Backstage Wife."

L. Hubbard Shattuck, director of the Chicago Historical society which sponsors the series of discussions, will be coördinator.

Numbers to be played by the orchestra will include "It's a Hap-Hap-Happy Day" from "Gulliver's Travels"; "Cherokee," "Night Glow" and "Back in Your Own Back Yard."

BAGGIORE DISCUSSES NEED FOR VERSATILITY IN A RADIO SINGER

What does a singer like to sing?

That question was discussed by Attilio Baggiore, W-G-N and the Mutual Broadcasting system's operatic tenor. It isn't what he likes that counts, in the Baggiore opinion, but the ability to sing a variety of numbers as requested by lovers of all types of music.

Baggiore enjoys singing semiclassical numbers and ballads more than anything else, as he believes these types are best suited for any and all media. His personal favorite in this field is "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling."

For radio Baggiore believes that melodic and sentimental tunes are the best. For concerts he thinks one can run the gamut of operatic arias, classics, and semiclassics. In the field of opera itself he enjoys the Italian and German schools the mos'

By the end of this season Baggiore will have sung 246 concerts. It will have been his ninth concert season. He has sung with the La Scala Opera company in Rome, the Royal Opera in Rome, the Royal Opera of Egypt, the San Carlo Opera of Naples, the Carlo Felice Opera of Genoa, the Amsterdam and Rotterdam Opera companies, and in Albert hall in London.

Break up colds faster!

......here's speedy way to hit your inner stride

Nobody enjoys the misery of a cold, but many people are careless. They get off-stride. Per-i-stal-sis (the contracting-expanding motion in the intestines) slows down. Constipation sets in. Result, colds often become stubborn and "hang on."

Don't let this happen! To clear the way for normal peristalsis, to break up colds faster, you want a quick, thorough flushing-out. That means you want Eno!

Eno at 7—relief by 8*

Take Eno before breakfast. It brings moisture to the intestines where extra fluid is needed. Speedily it flushes out wastes—usually* gives relief within the hour.

Eno "alkalizes", too

Besides giving speedy relief as a laxative, Eno also "alkalizes"—helps neutralize excess stomach acids . . . an extra benefit if you have a cold.

Why risk prolonging a stubborn cold? Get back on stride today—with Eno!

IDEAL YULETIDE GIFT FOR FAMILY, A POWDER ROOM

Waste Space Often May Be Converted.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Not many months ago Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Litvin, 1512 Chase avenue, gave their kitchen a complete modernization and enlarged it by adding two large pantries to its rather small original proportions. They also transformed two existing bathrooms with new fittings, fixtures, decorations, and fine accessories, and, in addition, found space on their first floor for a stunning new powder room.

What a Christmas gift to a house and to her—a brand new powder room! For powder rooms, with all their practical assets and virtues, have caught up with bathrooms now in the eye appeal and in the flair and care with which they are decorated. Sharp color contrasts can add to their distinction if you like these contrasts, and all manner of bewitching feminine frills can heighten the streamlined elegance of our modern plumbing fixtures.

Fixtures Are Purple.

This new powder room of the Litvins is a sparkling accomplishment, carried out with the polish which makes these modern home additions such admitted boons to our homes.

The walls are covered with a radiant wall paper, a paper with a silver background and splashed with rich purple flowers. The shade of these flowers blends with the rich purple fixtures. At one end of the room there is a built-in dressing compartment with mirrored walls and ceiling. At the windows are silver toned Venetian blinds with purple tapes. In one wall corner are gleaming glass shelves, and the new type of fluorescent lamp is employed here as well as in the modernized bathrooms.

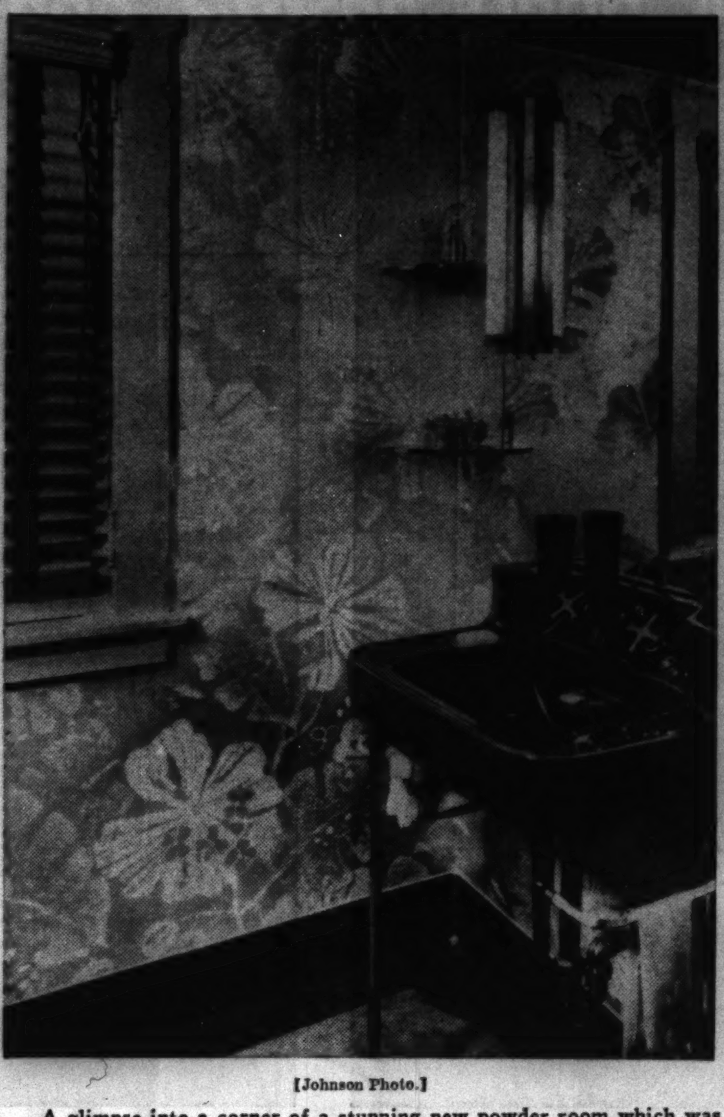
The kitchen modernization was outstanding in its thoroness and beauty, and was likewise of particular interest because originally it was quite a small kitchen and much space was given up to two large pantries. In the course of the alteration a large kitchen, 14x17 feet, emerged.

Has Indirect Lighting.

There is a dropped ceiling to the top of the white cabinets, the walls are covered with a cream colored linoleum, and on the floor is a dark gray linoleum with black trim. The linoleum on the counter tops is a shade between the walls and floor. Radiation is recessed, and under each cabinet and over the work surfaces there is indirect lighting.

In the main bathroom a lilac shade ceramic tile has been used for the walls. The tub is recessed, with a glamorous plate glass inclosure on which is an etched pattern, herons and flowers. The Venetian blinds are silver, with lilac tape, and there is an exquisite all-mirror vanity, also an all-mirror wall over the closet and lavatory. The second bath has white tile walls and sea green fixtures.

In Silver and Purple



[Johnson Photo.]

A glimpse into a corner of a stunning new powder room which was created from what was once under-the-stair space. Shimmering silver wall paper sports splashing purple flowers and fixtures are in a deep shade of purple tone. It is in the recently modernized home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Litvin, 1512 Chase avenue.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Dec. 4.

Many young, fall planted trees are seriously injured by rodents eating the bark during periods of heavy snows. It is wise to prepare against their attacks by placing collars of tar paper, fine meshed wire, or tin around the lower part of the trunk, placing the lower end in the ground three or four inches. Feed the birds that remain all winter near the home.

Tuesday, Dec. 5.

If geraniums are to bloom well indoors, they should be placed in a sunny window and grown in a day temperature of 70 to 75 degrees. They should not be given too much water and will flower better if kept in comparatively small pots. When house plants are syringed it should be done in the morning on sunny days. Plant a calla lily and place in the sunny window. The foliage is tropical and the flower always interesting and beautiful. Newly planted evergreens should be protected during winter; a V shaped board protection will help.

Wednesday, Dec. 6.

Pruning shrubs intelligently is beneficial. Dead wood and cross branches can be removed at any time. Shrubs that flower on wood made during the previous year must be pruned after flowering and those that flower on wood made during the current year while dormant. However, all old shrubs that have grown out of bounds may be pruned while dormant. Many old lilac bushes should be pruned to bring them into active growth and correct their form. All suckers should be kept out. Shrubs do much better when they make a luxuriant growth, which they cannot do if neglected.

Thursday, Dec. 7.

See to it that all garden furniture is put under shelter, that the portable birdhouses are placed where they can be repaired, and that all tools are cleaned and oiled, ready for use in springtime. Wash the hoe and shovel and then rub with an oily rag. They will remain until ready for use. Examine the bulbs that are stored away. If moisture accumulates in the packing material stored roots and bulbs will start growth. Newly planted trees that are susceptible to sun scald may be protected by wrapping the trunks with burlap or other material.

Friday, Dec. 8.

Small spruce and arborvitae are excellent for outdoor window boxes during winter. They cost little. The growth of rhubarb is much increased by putting manure around the plants. A humidifier attached to a radiator will aid the plants and also be beneficial to the family. The escape of illuminating gas or coal gas will injure plants even tho it may not be noticeable.

Saturday, Dec. 9.

Propagation of house plants always is interesting. Some plants, like the Rex begonia, one of the most beautifully marked of all plants, can be increased by cutting the leaves into a wedge shaped form, leaving the heaviest veins, and inserting in sand. Cover with glass. The sansevieria is increased by dividing the plant, especially the striped, golden leaved kind, which will not come true from cuttings of the leaves.

AUTO MASSACRE FOR NOVEMBER HEADS FOR LOW

24 Persons Lose Lives in Fourth Week.

Twenty-four persons lost their lives in Cook county traffic accidents during the fourth week of November, and it appeared almost certain that the month would hang up a new low record of fatalities for recent years.

The 24 new deaths brought the four weeks' total for Chicago and Cook county to 85. Two deaths last Wednesday, the 29th day, and only one up to 4 p. m. Thursday increased the month's toll to 88.

The best previous record since the automobile came into widespread use was established last year, when there were only 90 deaths in November. The 10 year average for the month was 111 fatalities.

Worst of the modern November records was set in 1930, when 129 lives were snuffed out by motor vehicles during the month. This massacre toll was almost equaled in 1936, when 124 persons died of traffic injuries.

Two Other Lows.

Only twice before this year did the fatalities remain below 100. The first time was 1937, when there were 96 November deaths. The other time was last year.

The first and third week of the month made possible the low total it is shown by a study of records kept by the coroner's office. In the first week there were only 14 traffic deaths. In the third week there were only 18. The second week saw 29, and the fourth week 24.

Chicago was charged with most of the vehicular killings, as usual, the city's deaths outnumbering those of outlying areas in the county by nearly four to one. Of the first four weeks' 85 deaths last month, Chicago had 67 and the suburbs only 18.

Pedestrians Bear Brunt.

Pedestrians again bore the brunt of the automotive slaughter. Of the month's 88 victims, 59 were run down while walking. By far the greater number of these were persons more than 50 years old or under 21, indicating that thoughtlessness and the infirmities of advancing age are heavy contributing factors to the traffic massacre.

Observers agreed that the chief reason why last month's deaths were held to such a low figure was that November weather this year was much drier and clearer than usual. This mildness enabled drivers to stop more quickly in emergencies, and also improved visibility for both motorists and pedestrians.

WHATEVER PRICE YOU PAY PER PACK, IT'S IMPORTANT TO REMEMBER THIS FACT: BY BURNING 25% SLOWER THAN THE AVERAGE OF THE 15 OTHER OF THE LARGEST-SELLING BRANDS TESTED—SLOWER THAN ANY OF THEM—CAMELS GIVE A SMOKING PLUS EQUAL TO 5 EXTRA SMOKES PER PACK!

Cigarettes were compared recently... sixteen of the largest-selling brands... under the searching tests of impartial laboratory scientists. Findings were announced as follows:

1. CAMELS were found to contain MORE TOBACCO BY WEIGHT than the average for the 15 other of the largest-selling brands.
2. CAMELS BURNED SLOWER THAN ANY OTHER BRAND TESTED—25% SLOWER THAN THE AVERAGE TIME OF THE 15 OTHER OF THE LARGEST-SELLING BRANDS! By burning 25% slower, on the average, Camels give smokers the equivalent of 5 EXTRA SMOKES PER PACK!
3. In the same tests, CAMELS HELD THEIR ASH FAR LONGER than the average time for all the other brands.

Don't deny yourself the pleasure of smoking Camels, the quality cigarette every smoker can afford.

PROFESSOR NESTOR, TELL ME ALL ABOUT THE EXPEDITION YOU HAD PLANNED—
SCIENTISTS FOR YEARS HAVE TRIED TO SOLVE THE ENIGMA OF THE LOST CONTINENT, ATLANTIS—I AM NO EXCEPTION—
EVERY SPARE MOMENT I HAVE HAD DURING THE PAST TEN YEARS HAS BEEN SPENT IN RESEARCH ON THE SUBJECT—AND MY STUDIES HAVE LED ME UNERRINGLY TO ONE POINT—THE INCA CIVILIZATION OF SOUTH AMERICA—THE INCAS, YOU KNOW, WERE THE PRINCES —RULERS OF ALMOST THE ENTIRE CONTINENT CENTURIES AGO—
THOSE INCA PRINCES WERE ENTIRELY DIFFERENT FROM THE TRIBES OVER WHICH THEY RULED—PHYSICALLY AND MENTALLY—
I UNDERSTAND! YOU THINK THAT IN THE DIM PAST THE ANCIENT INCAS MIGRATED TO SOUTH AMERICA FROM ATLANTIS?
EXACTLY, MR. GUMP— AND I HAVE THE GOOD FORTUNE TO BE IN POSSESSION OF AN ANCIENT SCROLL INDICATING THE HIDING PLACE OF PRICELESS RECORDS AND RELICS THAT WILL PROVE MY THEORY!!
THE RELICS WERE PROBABLY HIDDEN FROM THE SPANISH CONQUERORS MORE THAN 400 YEARS AGO—
YES—AND THAT MAP WAS DRAWN BY THE LAST GUARDIAN OF THE SECRET TEMPLE BEFORE HE DIED—
MY RESEARCH PROVES THAT THE MAP IS ABSOLUTELY AUTHENTIC—
PROF. NESTOR, I WOULD BE HONORED IF YOU WOULD PERMIT ME TO BE YOUR FINANCIAL BACKER—
THANK YOU, MR. GUMP— YOU HAVE MADE MY DREAMS COME TRUE!! YOUR CONFIDENCE IN ME HAS BOLSTERED MY OWN COURAGE— I WILL SUCCEED!!
THANK YOU, SIR, FOR PERMITTING ME TO BE ASSOCIATED WITH SO GREAT A SCIENTIST AS YOURSELF!
IT IS A PITY TO SEPARATE MY LITTLE SON AND CHESTER— THEY HAVE BECOME SUCH FAST FRIENDS
OH, SO YOU ARE GOING TO TAKE YOUR BOY ON THE EXPEDITION?
FATHER, PLEASE COULD YOU TAKE CHESTER ALONG?
OBOY! THAT WOULD BE SWELL!
WHAT A SPLENDID IDEA! CHESTER WILL BE COMPANY FOR JIMMY!!
WELL, ER—I'D NATURALLY HAVE TO GET HIS PARENTS' CONSENT—
VERY GOOD, MR. GUMP— YOU WILL LET ME KNOW THEIR ANSWER IN A FEW DAYS?
—SEEMS TO ME TO BE A SWELL SUGGESTION—IF THE TRIP WERE HAZARDOUS, THE PROFESSOR CERTAINLY WOULDN'T BE TAKING HIS OWN LITTLE SON—
OH— PLEASE, PAPA!!

HE WRENCHED THE WORKS LOOSE FROM THE CASE
USING THE PROJECTING COG OF THE MAINSPRING AS A CUTTING EDGE, HE SAWED AWAY.
AHA--- I THINK I'VE GOT IT.
AT LAST! NOW OFF WITH THAT PIECE OF ADHESIVE TAPE— AND THEN TO FREE MY LEGS.
THE FORTY DOLLARS I PAID FOR THAT WATCH WAS THE MOST IMPORTANT INVESTMENT I EVER MADE IN MY LIFE.

BUT YOU'RE MY DAUGHTER. I LOVE YOU, BINNIE!
YOU HAVEN'T BEEN TO SEE US SINCE YOU GOT OUT... YOU SENT THESE MEN ---- YOU'RE WITH THE GANGSTERS AGAIN.

Pimples bar many boys and girls from having good times. Mothers, you should learn now two important reasons why young people from 13 to 25 often suffer from these unattractive skin blemishes.

FIRST—At this age, the skin is extra sensitive. Then sluggish intestines may easily cause these pimples to break out.

SECOND—Your boy or girl may not be getting enough Vitamin A—an important vitamin for healthy and attractive skin.

Help your children overcome both these troubles by giving them Fleischmann's High-Vitamin Yeast regularly. The fresh yeast itself can aid in stimulating sluggish intestines. And two cakes of this new yeast supply over 6000 units of Vitamin A.

Start your boy or girl with pimply skin eating Fleischmann's High-Vitamin Yeast, two cakes every day—one cake ½ hour before breakfast, the other ½ hour before supper. Many delighted with improvement in 30 days or less!

READ HOW THIS* GIRL WAS HELPED (picture at left)

"My skin used to be broken-out and unattractive looking. But eating Fleischmann's High-Vitamin Yeast helped it beautifully. I still eat the yeast regularly, because I don't want to have a lot of pimples again."

Six years ago I came to Chicago and ran my first advertisement for men to help me establish my business, using as a base an electrical unit.

During these six years my business has grown to where hundreds of men are associated with me within a 200 mile radius. We have not scratched the ice, even though we have over 50,000 customers. Your neighbors, friends, and relatives are users of my products and my associates who handle these customers earn in commission and bonus alone monthly figures in many cases from two to four times as much as they ever earned in their lives.

MY PROPOSITION

You call at exactly 11 a. m. Monday. I spend two hours with you explaining every detail and answering your every question.
At 12:30 p. m. I select 8 that I will completely finance. You do not invest one cent.
The following day you are trained in our business and select location.
Wednesday morning you are in business for yourself under our iron clad contract which is the same as all other men have.
Next Monday [one week from the day you answer this ad] your first weekly settlement record will be ready.
Your past experience means nothing to me. Neither does your religion or politics. If you want to make money, are willing to work, are honest and reliable, that is all I ask. No strings attached—no red tape.

YES Sir! the famous "Pot of Gold" house is completed. Remember we asked you to watch us build it. Featured by Better Homes and Gardens magazine. We were chosen to build the first one in Chicagoland. Really, fellow, it's a dandy! 6 rooms and attached garage, plus a spacious recreation room. It is heated with a modern automatic semi-air conditioned plant. We have used 1940 wallpaper [on the presses in New York Thursday afternoon], Parkay flooring thruout. The 45 ft. lot with a quaint little fence, is landscaped. But why go on? Drive out today and see the "Home of the Month."

DAY by DAY on the FARM by BOB BECKER

Fall Work in Progress.

Dec. 2, 1939.

THE workers on the Du Page county farm are busy with miscellaneous jobs which they hope to finish before winter sets in in earnest. One of the men has been operating a tractor and plow combination in one of the fields. Fall plowing is one job the men like to get out of the way before the weather becomes too severe, and a change in crop plans for next spring made it important that this last field be plowed this fall. Several of the men are busy with a road grader pulled by the big Diesel-powered caterpillar. A road running north and south thru the center of the farm is being moved several yards west of its present route. The old roadbed is to be converted into lawn space.

Three other farm workers have been cleaning up the big sheep barn. The old floor bedding was taken out and hauled to the vegetable garden for fertilizer, and fresh bales of straw were piled in one corner of the barn to be put on the barn floor. The flockmaster explained that in a little more than a month the first lambs of the 1940 crop will be arriving, and it is important that the sheep barn be clean and ready for this annual event.

Tracing a Mallard.

We scanned our bird banding records this week to look up band number 642904. The aluminum band with this series of figures was taken from a mallard drake that we brought home from a hunting trip near Duck Island, a few miles below Pekin, Ill., on the Illinois river.

Inasmuch as a number of ducks have been banded on the farm, we wanted to see if this mallard could have been given its number on the Du Page county farm. But our series of duck bands starts with 640 and not 642. So we are mailing the metal band to the United States biological survey, which has the records on all banded birds. From this bureau we will learn where the mallard was caught, banded, and released.

Turkeys Go Native.

A family of six turkeys living on the farm has gone native with a vengeance. Not even cold weather or a shortage of wild food can drive this group back to the barnyard. The old turkey hen moved into the farm woods this spring to raise a family. When her poults hatched, she decided to keep them there. Several other turkey hens also raised families in the woods, but all took their poults into the barnyard during October's first cold snaps. Only this hen stayed in the woodlot with her youngsters. The flockmaster has been expecting her to lead her poults into the barnyard every cool day, but so far she refuses to be bluffed by the weatherman.

It's possible that this hardy old bird and her healthy youngsters will live in the woods all winter. The flockmaster takes a little feed to them every day when he rides to the ponds to feed the waterfowl. And the turkeys have an oak tree in which they like to roost, so they have all the comforts of home in their woodland hangout.

Residents of Illinois have benefited by this new "SPECIAL" Loan Plan.

As little as $2.00 to $2.26 a week repays in full, including all charges, a $150 loan over 20 months at America's largest loan company. No salary assignments.

$2.00 a week on the average is all you need to set aside for every $150 borrowed on Personal's new amazing "Special" loan plan of only 1¼% per month on the actual balance owed. This plan is for persons with a steady income or salary sufficient to meet payments promptly without undue credit strain and a good credit record. You don't need co-makers, life insurance, or bankable securities.

For persons without established credit and employment ratings and who wish to carry a loan larger than 8 to 12% of annual salary or income, Personal offers its "Regular" loan plan. On this plan an average of $2.26 set aside per week takes care of everything on a $150 loan—the charge is based on 3% monthly on unpaid balances of $100 and less and 2% monthly on unpaid balances over $100.

Loans up to $300 on either plan on your personal note or with furniture or auto. Co-maker loans are also available on "Regular" plan. Seize this opportunity to save on loan costs. Come in or telephone today.

STUDEBAKER Suggests "ASK THE LADY OF THE HOUSE"

She knows that "quality at a low price" is a lot different than a so-called "bargain." Because bargain-counter merchandise usually has a flaw, or is shopworn. YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO TAKE THAT CHANCE WHEN YOU BUY A CAR.

CONSISTENTLY LOW PRICES and a 27 YEAR REPUTATION Make STUDEBAKER CHICAGO'S USED CAR HEADQUARTERS

AND REMEMBER—
Studebaker handle all their own time payment deals. No outside finance company; no embarrassing questions from strangers—It's a SECRET between you and Studebaker.

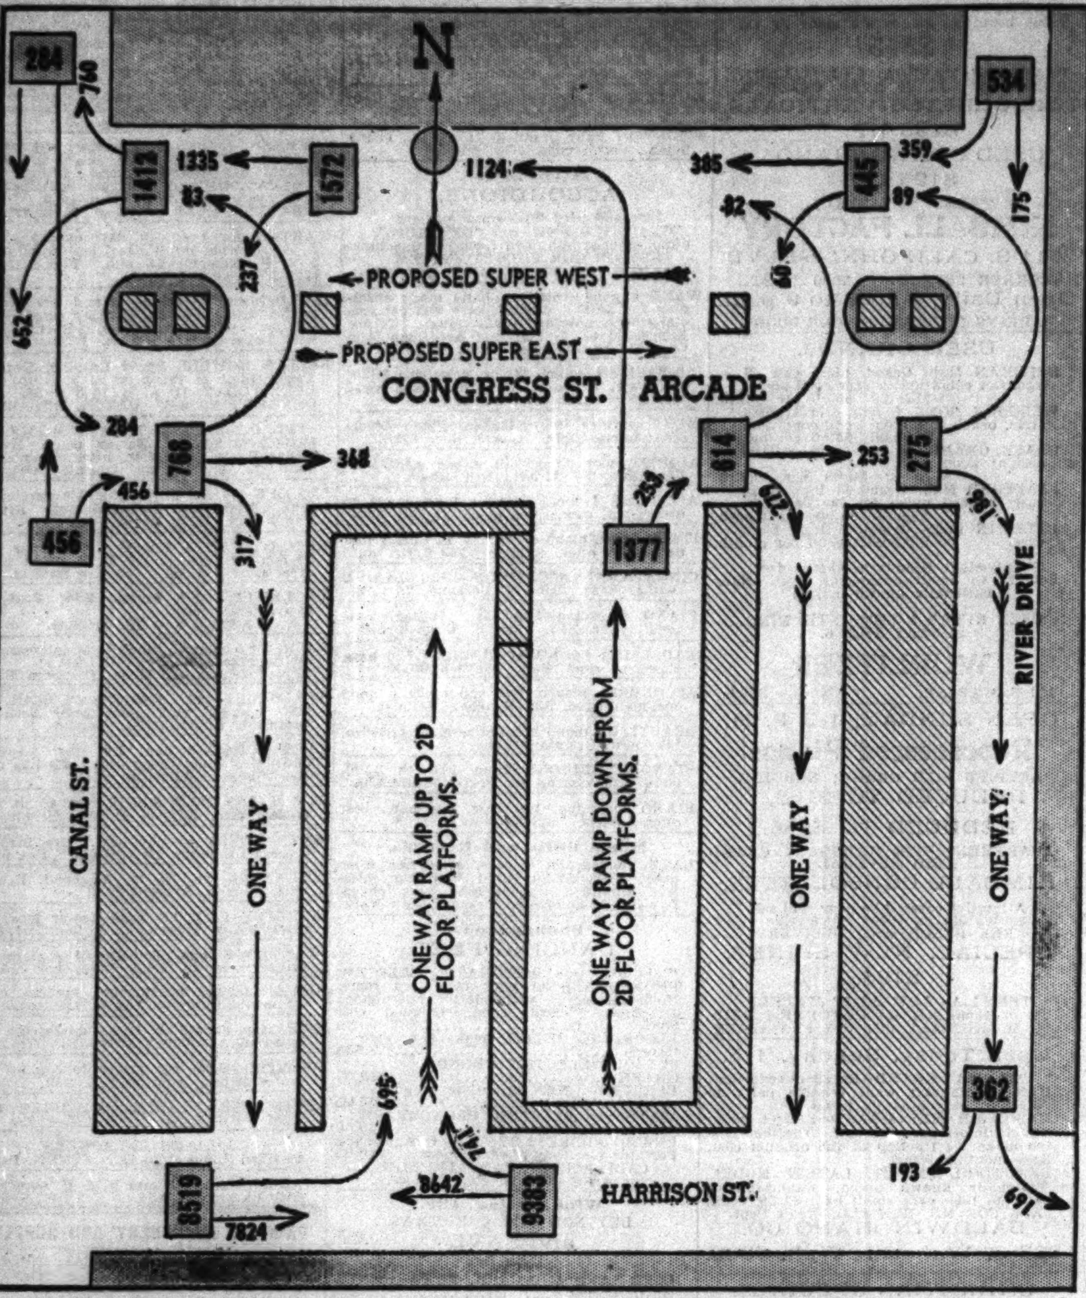
MOTORS—TRAFFIC—HIGHWAYS

Proposed Super Would Block Mails



This is a WPA traffic survey at the postoffice. The figures indicate the number of vehicles counted in 16 hours in the directions of the arrows. The vehicles entering and leaving the postoffice are mail trucks. The chart, showing the various turns made by these mail trucks, is cited by motor club engineers to support their contention that the introduction of superhighway traffic into the postoffice arcade would delay Chicago's incoming and outgoing mail.

Find Congress Superhighway Plan Will Delay Mail Service

BY HAL FOUST.

Chicago's mail service would be seriously retarded by the construction of a superhighway in Congress street as proposed by city engineers in plans pending before the council. This conclusion was reached by engineers for the Chicago Motor club.

This conclusion was founded on a WPA traffic survey, on interviews with government employés who direct the loading and unloading of mail at the postoffice, and on a study of the present system of transferring mails between trucks and conveyor belts at the postoffice.

Would Go Thru Mail Arcade.

The superhighway plans before the council would send large volumes of passenger car traffic thru a postoffice arcade which is now used almost exclusively by trucks hauling mail. The volume and character of this present usage is shown by the WPA survey. According to the government men, who cannot be quoted because of the rules of the service, a restraint on these truck movements maneuvering to and from loading platforms would delay both incoming and outgoing mail.

Postmaster Ernest J. Kruetgen yesterday declined to comment on this threat against the efficiency if not the workability of this $21,000,000 mail terminal completed in 1933.

"I don't want to appear to be an obstructionist in the way of any development that would benefit Chicago," he said. "But," he continued in response to a question, "if the city council requests the information, I'll be glad to place the facts before the aldermen."

Farley's Office Perturbed.

The postmaster, it was learned from other souces, has another reason for speaking delicately of the Congress street project. Postmaster General Farley's office at Washington has become perturbed about this threat against America's largest mail terminal. The department is in a predicament as a result of the preceding régime having consented to a future opening of Congress street thru the arcade. It's in a weak position to protest now.

The Chicago council, however, is not laboring under any such diplomatic restraints. It can drop the plan to direct superhighway traffic thru the arcade if the aldermen conclude that it is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of motor travel or that it is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of mail transportation.

Served by this Congress street arcade are doors and ramps to platform stalls for 54 trucks on the ground floor and for 75 trucks on the second floor. Those are not storage spaces; they're for loading and unloading with a constant in and out movement thruout the 24 hours, heavy from 8 a. m. until 6 p. m. with peaks concurrent with the morning and evening rush hours.

WPA Gives Traffic Count.

A WPA traffic count during 16 hours of Oct. 10, 1938, reported 1,377 trucks leaving the second floor into the Congress arcade. At the same time, 596 trucks entered the first floor loading zone from the arcade.

This mail traffic involved left turns and right turns onto and off Canal street. It involved left turns and right turns inside the arcade. And it involved left turns and right turns at the eastern end of the arcade. The WPA survey showed these turns.

Under the Congress street superhighway plan, as prepared by Charles E. De Leuw, consulting engineer for the city, left turns would be prohibitive and prohibited at all of these places where they are now practiced. They cannot be prohibited if the two floors of truck platforms are to function as they are now arranged.

Under this present arrangement, the entrance to the second floor is from Harrison street and the exit into the arcade. Entrance to the first floor is from the arcade with the exits into Harrison street. It is an efficient layout with congestion in Harrison as the only drawback, according to the government men.

Can't Rearrange Platforms.

Insofar as could be learned from the men who operate this part of the mail service, there is no way that these loading platforms could be rearranged to function with anything like their present efficiency were the arcade to be filled with passenger car traffic. They said that a rerouting of the trucks to eliminate left turns would add to the present congestion in Harrison and Canal streets, would increase distances for the vehicles to travel, and would add several minutes to each of their trips.

"It doesn't seem likely that the aldermen, even when pushed by an organized promotion for Congress street," said Joseph J. Cavanagh, manager of the Chicago Motor club, "will perpetrate this offense against the welfare of Chicago. Mail service is the life blood of the community. Prompt mail service is of concern to the humble laborer and to the large corporation.

Would Miss Trains.

"With construction under the present Congress street plan, outgoing letters, newspapers, and parcels would miss trains that they now catch. A train won't wait for a truck stalled in traffic. Incoming letters, newspapers, and parcels would be delivered to homes and offices later than they are now received."

Virtually all of Chicago's mail is concerned with the efficiency of the truck system at the postoffice. All except the small part moved afoot to and from the postoffice arrives at or leaves from the main terminal in trucks.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Buick is adding a new "estate wagon" to its 1940 line of automobiles, Harlow H. Curtice, president of the Buick division of General Motors, announced yesterday. Production already has started to fill retail requirements, he said. The new model is built on the series 50 super chassis, the wide frame of which permits an exceptionally large body. Both front and rear seats seat three passengers each and there is room for an additional passenger on the rear seat. The luggage compartment is unusually large. The car has a 107 horse power engine.

M. J. Golden, general sales manager of Willys Overland Motors, Inc., states that the company now has more than 1,500 dealers thruout the nation, substantially more than in 1938. Samuel L. Davis, veteran Chicago dealer, is the Willys distributor for this area.

Membership of the Chicago Automobile Trade association now stands at 393, representing a gain of 98 per cent within 18 months, S. B. Shapiro, general manager, reports. He said that members account for 95 per cent of automobile sales in Cook county.

VOICE OF TRAFFIC

SHOULD MOTORISTS PAY MORE?

Chicago, Oct. 12.—Having been an autoist for twelve years and a pedestrian for about forty years, I will say that a big per cent of the autoists are road hogs. Try walking for a change and you will find that three-fourths of the drivers will not give a pedestrian a show at through streets or corners when turning with the lights.

And as for autoists building the roads, I believe the taxpayers or property owners paid for the good roads and are still taxed today for the same thing. I can remember paying $72 for widening and repaving 22d street from Archer avenue east although I live close to a mile from there and may not walk or ride on that street the rest of my life. The trucks and autos use it every day.

If taxes were put in the proper place, the autoists would pay more taxes than they have been paying. G. C. Z.

WINTER IS COMING.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—Chicago is lagging far behind other cities in snow removal. The city ought to spread sand and salt. These spreaders can be attached to trucks.

The council ought to get up a list of streets on which snow removal should be carried out—on such streets, for example, as Madison street, [Milw]aukee avenue, Stony Island avenue, and Broadway on the north side. Next there ought to be a list of thru arteries of travel pr pared, where the sanding process should be carried out.

Now is the time to think of snow removal. D. V. HAVILAND.

SEE TRIBUNE TOUR BUREAU.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—In driving to Florida during my boy's Christmas school vacation, what routes do you recommend? Could we save money by stopping at tourist camps? What could we see of interest en route? How cheaply can we enjoy a week in Florida? ROBERT R. REMSINGER.

REPORTS DOWNSTATE TRAP.

Mattoon, Ill., Nov. 15.—Tourists and other motorists should be warned of speed trap at Pana, Ill. The writer was picked up on route 24 on the outskirts of Pana and charged with driving 40 miles per hour in a 30 mile zone. The state markers show a 40 mile limit and there are no city signs posted. GEORGE R. MAYFIELD.

ORNAMENTATION OF STREETS ADDS TRAFFIC DANGERS

Christmas ornamentation of city streets adds to the traffic hazard in this season of bad weather driving. In addition to the threats of ice, sleet, snow, and early darkness, motorists are handicapped by red and green bunting and red and green lights in many instances camouflaging stop and go signals. The heavy pedestrian traffic during the Christmas shopping season contributes to the toll. Carl A. Barrett, president of the Illinois Automobile club, last week pointed out that during the holiday shopping period last year there were 269 persons killed and 2,676 injured in Illinois traffic. It was the peak in the year's accident record.

SERVING CHICAGO FOR 92 YEARS

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
Chicago Sunday Tribune

Right: A perfume that may be worn around the clock has heady sweetness deftly balanced by a spicy undertone.

(Tribune Studio photos.)

Right: For the woman who likes straight floral scents, perfumes or colognes in either sweet or fresh odors make the ideal Christmas gift. Some are romantic, some tangy. All are attractive.

Perfumes Rank High as Gifts for Christmas

By ELEANOR NANGLE

WHETHER perfumes were first used to placate angry gods, to drive away evil spirits, or simply to satisfy the sense of beauty, no one quite knows. All we do know is that the custom of using scents is older than the oldest records and that there are few things as enduring as the feminine passion for fine fragrances.

Perfumes rank high as Christmas gifts. Age and type are no barrier to their enjoyment. The demure little old lady and the girl about town react in exactly the same fashion to a gift of perfume, altho their tastes in scents will differ radically.

On the donor rests the burden of judging the recipient's taste. Her personality is the clew. The girl about town will inevitably like something whoopsey and provocative; the dear little old lady will prefer her fragrances sweet and straightforward.

If possible, before you buy perfume for any one, learn what she likes. If you can't unearth this important bit of knowledge, let your own estimate of her as a personality be your guide.

Some perfumes, well known and well loved, may become difficult to obtain if war rocks the world. If you know a woman treasures one of these imports the existence of which is threatened, you could make no wiser gesture than to give her a liberal supply this Christmas.

Most women of sophistication prefer blends to straight floral scents nowadays, altho for certain types of women there is eternal charm in the straight gardenia, violet, jasmine, and rose.

Women who are active in sports and whose wardrobes consist mainly of sports clothes will want perfumes that have tang and freshness. There are dozens of these. Clover is increasingly popular.

Opulent fabrics and furs, and the type of women who choose them above all others, demand a frankly opulent perfume. It verges on heaviness but escapes it deftly, and you can't miss its sophistication. Most perfumes of this type are blends, and the harder it is to guess the base, the more intriguing the perfume!

The good gardenia goes on forever. Heavier than the average straight floral, it has special appeal for the woman who likes romantic perfumes. The good gardenia is not sweet. One of its prime requisites is an undertone that is almost, but not quite, acrid. Tuberose is a heavy perfume, frankly romantic.

In the last year American women (and those menfolk whose approval from the sidelines counts for so much) have fallen quite madly in love with a brand new type of fragrance. This is spicy, but not in the way you might think. Its base is exactly that scent that made grandma's spice box so entrancing. There is subtle suggestion of cinnamon, nutmeg, sugar, and spice. In perfume, cologne, toilet water, soap, and dusting powder its popularity has made perfume history!

Perfume is a gracious gift. It flatters. Woman's delight in it is so complex that it surpasses masculine understanding, but every woman knows that there is nothing so efficacious in reestablishing her sense of femininity and self-esteem as the use of just one drop of any appealing fragrance.

Below: The sophisticated woman chooses a sophisticated perfume. It is not obvious or heavy, but it has a dash that makes it provocative and a subtle roundness that gives it a haunting quality.

It Isn't Necessary for a Boy to Be Roughneck

By GLADYS HUNTINGTON BEVANS

(Copyright: 1939: News Syndicate Co., Inc.)

IS IT fathers or mothers I should warn most against the besetting fear regarding their sons that, unless they "treat 'em rough" or unless their boys treat every one else rough, they can't possibly grow up to be real men—masculine men?

At first I thought this warning should be addressed to fathers. But then I called to mind the women I know who have the same fear.

There are many women who think that a son isn't manlike unless he's aggressive or belligerent, and who think that strenuous methods must be resorted to if a boy is to be sufficiently masculine. Women who have to bring up their sons single-handed are prone to these misgivings. But this belief, in either father or mother has made life miserable for many a little boy and big one, too, who didn't fit the pattern which one of his parents had mentally cut out and labeled masculine.

It is in a way rather surprising how many fathers and mothers there are who fear their boys won't be real boys if they're gentle. I mean, it's surprising in view of the fact that a normal man who is effeminate is a rare sight. It's surprising, too, how many fathers are horrified if their sons are "different" or are frightened to death if their boys seem to give any indication of the tastes of an artist, a poet, a sculptor, or a writer. Or if they're gentle, considerate, averse to fighting, don't care for sports, don't act like little savages, many parents are filled with misgivings. They want he-man stuff.

In actual practice many people have one code of conduct for a boy and an entirely different one for a man. It must be very bewildering to a boy. What age, what point in his life, is a boy supposed to recognize as the parting of the ways, the moment at which he is to emerge full grown from the chrysalis of the boy into the ideals and actions of the man? Yet some mothers and many fathers expect some such magic transformation in their sons when manhood overtakes them, whether they have paved the way for it or not.

When we sit down and try to think what people expect in a man we soon realize that it doesn't coincide with what we usually look for in a boy.

If a man is loving and considerate of his mother we admire him for it and think her a lucky woman.

If a man is protective of his wife and children we feel that is as it should be.

If a man is courteous and considerate we expect it at the same time that we like it.

If a man is big and strong, yet gentle, we do not scoff. In the lusty days of good King Arthur that was one of the requirements of a "very parfait gentil knight."

If a man has a sense of responsibility, if he is tolerant of other people's ideas, if he is generous, if he is clean thinking and clean speaking, we don't consider him any less a man.

At this point I'm afraid you may feel like saying, "Heavens, this woman is visualizing a perfect man, a paragon, of which 'there ain't no such animal.'" But I'm not. Some fine men have no manners. Some men, with all the other sterling qualities, are selfish. Fortunately, or unfortunately, no one man can be the repository of all the virtues, and we women are lucky if our menfolk have been able to "grab off" a few of the best. But we know what (Continued on Page 2.)

Below: The beginning of self-reliance is apparent in this small boy's attention to his shoe laces. Because he isn't screaming for help doesn't mean he's a namby-pamby, that he won't grow up to be a "he-man." Some of the gentlest children, with excellent manners, grow up two-fisted.

Ideas for the Other Holiday Meals Ahead

By Mary Meade.

[Copyright: 1939: By The Chicago Tribune.]

The memories of Thanksgiving turkey and trimmings have scarcely retreated to a corner of the cook's mind when the time comes to plan a Christmas feast. Christmas dinners are much like Thanksgiving repasts. They are as bountiful, as studded with cranberries, as much occasions for family gatherings.

These menus for Christmas meals cling to some of the old traditions, yet aren't too elaborate or difficult for the average cook to tackle. Goose, turkey, chicken, beef, and ham are centers of interest for these dinners.

CRANBERRY CHIFFON PIE.

1 baked 9 inch pie shell
1 cup cooked cranberries and juice, strained
1 cup sugar
4 eggs, beaten separately
1 tablespoon gelatin
¼ cup cold water
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Whipping cream [½ cup] for topping

Strain cooked cranberries. There should be more juice than pulp. Add ¾ cup of the sugar. Beat egg yolks until light and add cranberry juice and sugar. Cook in the top of a double boiler until custardy, six minutes or slightly longer, stirring constantly. Add to gelatin which has soaked for five minutes in cold water. Add salt and lemon juice. Cool until the mixture begins to congeal. Fold in egg whites, which have been beaten until stiff, into which the other fourth cup of sugar has been beaten. Fill pie shell, chill until firm, and top with whipped cream to serve.

CHESTNUT STUFFING.
[For 16 pound turkey]

1½ pounds chestnuts
½ cup chopped suet
1 medium onion, chopped
½ cup celery, sliced
1¼ pound loaf bread, crumbled
¼ cup chopped parsley
1 cup melted butter
1½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon paprika
1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
2 eggs, beaten
½ cup hot top milk

Slit each chestnut shell and place the chestnuts in a shallow pan in a hot oven. Pour a tablespoon and a half of oil over them. Leave them in the oven for five minutes, after which shell and inner skin may be removed. Cook chestnuts in boiling salted water until tender, drain and chop. Brown onion and celery in suet. Add chestnuts and remaining ingredients. [Trim crusts from bread.] Mix lightly and stuff the fowl.

Recipes for the rolls, muffins, and Yorkshire pudding mentioned in these menus are to be found in the new booklet, "Better Homemade Breads and Rolls," which may be obtained by sending 23 cents, preferably in stamps, to Mary Meade, Chicago Tribune.

Patterns by Clotilde

By Clotilde.

The three patterns offered today create strictly utilitarian dresses. Two of them are for wear in the home, and the third is for classroom and office purposes. The most inexpensive materials are suggested.

Left, a tailored model with rever neckline, buttons all the way down the front, crisply styled, short kimono sleeves, and triangularly designed pockets. This dress is lovely enough to wear for informal hostessing.

Center, a more informal dress with beruffled collar, kimono sleeves, and pockets. The frock is cut for flare, and a belt extends only from the sides around to the back.

Right, a girlish jumper costume with traditional shirtwaist blouse that has long, full sleeves. The jumper skirt has comfortably wide shoulder straps and deep V armholes and front and back. A contrasting belt may be used around the waist, and the skirt flares. Woolen for the skirt and washable crêpe for the blouse make an attractive combination.

Style No. 2788 is designed for sizes 14 and 16, and 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measurement. Size 36 requires 4⅜ yards of 39 inch material.

Style No. 2640 is designed for size 16 and for 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50 inches bust measurement. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards of 39 inch material.

Style No. 2638 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16 requires 2⅜ yards of 54 inch material for jumper; 1⅞ yards of 39 inch for blouse.

Each of these easy-to-make styles costs 10 cents.

Table Setting Important to Dinner Charm

Where should the home altar be? For answers to this and many other questions about weddings, read Helen Bartlett's valuable booklet, "The Home Wedding." On sale at the Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street and Tribune Tower. Price, 2 cents; by postpaid mail, 3 cents.

By Helen Bartlett.

Christmas being the day it is for entertaining, it is possible that there are hostesses we could help by running once lightly thru the rules for setting the table and serving the dinner. Whether it is a comfortable family gathering, as most Christmas day dinners are, or a party during holiday week to which have been invited a group of the most critical friends, correct table setting, and smooth, attractive service will add much to the pleasure of the guests, to say nothing of the poise and comfort of the hostess.

The selection of the cloth is the first thing, and when the one which is most suitable to the character of the meal is decided upon, it is placed on the table; then the centerpiece; next, the silverware. Each individual cover should be so carefully laid that it duplicates exactly the adjacent one. The standard space is two feet, measuring from the center of one plate to the center of the next. The service plate is set in the center of each cover, and the napkin may be either on the service plate or to the left of the cover.

In placing the flatware remember these rules: All forks go to the left with the single exception of the oyster fork; spoons and knives go to the right; each piece is placed in the order of its use, from the extreme right or left toward the plate. For instance, at the extreme right there will be the oyster fork, next the bouillon or soup spoon, next the dinner knife. At the extreme left will be the salad fork and next in order to the right the dinner fork.

Bread and butter plates usually are not used at dinner, and never at a formal dinner. When they are used at luncheon they are placed at the upper left [the tip of the fork]. The bread and butter spreader is placed on the plate horizontal to the edge of the table.

Carving and serving silver are placed at the right of the host's own dinner silver.

Dessert silver is brought in with the dessert course, and coffee or demitasse spoons are placed on the saucer when the coffee is served.

When the water glasses have been filled, the relishes placed on the table, either a couple of pairs of salts and peppers or individual ones for each guest arranged, bread and rolls placed on the table, unless they are to be served by the maid, chairs put in place [the front edge of the chair just even with the edge of the table] the guests may be called to dinner.

We will save the directions for the dinner service until next Sunday. And you still will have time to master these problems, come Christmas day, any time after 2 o'clock.

Campus Modes by a Co-ed

By Carolyn Ramey.

Altho the major interest of any co-ed is the clothes she wears to social affairs, there is no denying the fact that the frocks she dons for classes are highly important. It is in the classroom that she makes her deepest impression on professors and potential beaux. Dresses for such utilitarian wear must resist the tendency of all hard worn dresses to become out of press and a bit helter-skelter in appearance. The antidote for such an undesirable condition is to have the dress so simple that it always looks neat. I think this pattern is one all co-eds and business girls will like.

There is no collar, unless you especially want one. Below the narrow shoulder yoke is plenty of shirring to soften the bodice. The sleeves may be short and puffed or long and full. Arrangement of the buttons may be single-breasted or double-breasted, and a belt also is optional. Both leather and self-fabric are suitable if you choose to wear a belt.

My own dress from this pattern is of woolen jersey in bright blue, with the belt of scarlet patent leather, and I chose to have the long sleeves. All kinds of lightweight woolens make up well, and sturdy crêpes are in order, too.

Style No. T-8650 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16 requires 3⅞ yards of 39 inch material for long sleeved version.

Not Necessary that a Child Be Roughneck

are the desirable things for a man to be, and we want as many of them as possible in our sons.

So, a boy can be taught protectiveness toward his younger brother and sister.

He can be trained to have good manners.

He can be allowed to show his affection for those he loves.

He can be taught not to be mean with other boys or to ridicule people cruelly.

He can be taught, if this seems necessary, to protect himself efficiently with his fists without being encouraged to become pugnacious or a bully.

He can be encouraged in all these directions without being any the less a boy. None of this will lessen his boyishness or his freedom.

It would be easier and better for many boys if their parents would free themselves of the fear that their boys will not be regular boys unless they foster certain traits they would never want them to have as men, and overlook other ones.

Take the matter of fighting, for instance. Of course it's good for a boy to know how to hold his own. But that doesn't mean he has to be doing it all the time to prove he's a "reg'lar feller." A lot of the fighting boys do is merely an outlet for their tremendous physical energy. There are lots of other outlets that could be found for it—boxing, real wrestling and all the rougher games.

Parents needn't worry. If their sons have the making of real boys in them, it will come out. All they need is a wholesome normal environment with plenty of boy companions. The rest will take care of itself—no fear. Instead of trying to urge them toward what is almost a comic supplement standardized idea of what a real boy should be, it would be better to spend that worry and energy on gently inducting into their lives some of the ideals of true manhood.

We have a new booklet called "Building Truth." To obtain it send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans, Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Crocheted Hug-Me-Tight

By Ellen Bruce.

This unusual, crocheted hug-me-tight is made in one triangular piece and then joined at the underarm. That is all there is to creating one of those warm and comfortable jackets. A few balls of Shetland floss, the easy double crochet stitch, and shell trimming are the requirements for completing the hug-me-tight. A day and a half is the time necessary for the small size. The instructions include directions for crocheting medium and large sizes, too.

For instructions in crocheting the hug-me-tight, No. X-395, send 10 cents in stamps or coin to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 Fifth avenue, New York City.

STUBBORN RHEUMATIC PAIN
When Aggravated by Excess Uric Acid

Thousands take ALLENRU for the pains of rheumatism, neuritis, lumbago or rheumatic backache when aggravated by excess uric acid or other circulating poisons. Such excess acid and poisons should soon start to leave your body and thus the terrible agony is often relieved—no powders—no opiates.

Ask any live druggist in America for an ounce bottle of ALLENRU—a liquid—costs about 85 cents—save this notice.

If you are a washing machine user, you simply owe it to yourself to try this new "miracle" soap. For the results it gives are so utterly amazing that leading washing machine makers are changing to it—as the soap they recommend for use in new or old washers.

New High-Test OXYDOL can give such amazing results for it is a new-type soap, containing a remarkable new ingredient. An ingredient that vastly increases its white-washing power, yet keeps it SAFE for washable colors, fabrics, and hands.

Fortified by this new "miracle" ingredient, new High-Test Oxydol has been found to do these astonishing things:—

(1) Gets clothes as much as 9 to 11 shades whiter than a number of popular bar and package soaps tested. Actual Tintometer shades—as shown by our laboratory tests.

(2) Cup for cup—it gives up to THREE TIMES THE SUDS—suds that stand up 2 to 3 times longer.

Yet it is so SAFE that even cotton prints, given the equivalent of a full year's washing, showed no perceptible sign of fading—stayed looking bright and sparkling as new, wash after wash.

New High-Test Oxydol is economical, too. Each cup of it goes up to one-fourth again as far as less modern soaps we have tested.

So, no matter what soap you've been using, try new High-Test OXYDOL today. You'll be so thrilled with its amazingly white, bright washes, you'll never go back to less modern soaps again. Procter & Gamble.

Winter Sports Togs Cut with Craftsmanship

By Rhea Seeger.

Winter sports togs are cut, designed, and presented with the same fashion dramatics found in any other collection of individual creations. Expert craftsmanship achieves super streamlines with cozy comfort and slenderness because of flexible, comparatively lightweight materials that also are windproof and water repellent. Gone are the shapeless, baggy costumes, the old thick, bulky, and clumsy outlines; here to stay, the sleek distinction of fine apparel carefully and painstakingly put together.

There's a wide difference between the active sports clothes and those especially designed for the spectators. Everything used in the active suits is featherweight, streamlined to provide a sapling-thin silhouette without sacrificing any comfort of thicker fabrics. Trousers for the active snow birds are slimmed down to the minimum, then tucked comfortably into warm, carefully fitted boots and socks, always with the laces tied at the side to avoid tripping. Windbreaker materials so light that they seem to be sturdy cottons make the tops, and fine garbardine the pants.

Accessories are made of the same lightweight materials: Huge mittens, cold-defying socks, hats or caps, and an extra sheep-lined greatcoat for the letdown after a day's sport. Suits and accessories for active sports are the last word in action free construction, in featherweight windbreaker materials, and sleek streamlining. The contrast colors are provided with the accessories and undersweaters, the suits themselves usually of neutral shades, such as navy, storm gray, beige, black, dull green, and a few all whites for the expert performer.

Other wintertime outfits for sledding, tobogganing, and other outdoor recreation are made of thicker fabrics, warm and windproof. Fleecy woolens in vivid shades of red and green make the trousers, slacks, and tops. Zippers are plentiful in both active and spectator sports models, from hip pockets, side pockets, and chest pockets to cuff fasteners and the front of the blouse. Sweaters, fitted and quilted jackets of every conceivable wool in bold contrasts, neck scarfs, caps, hats, long mittens, socks, and occasional belts are used for telling splashes of color against the high colored or dark tones of the suits themselves.

Skating costumes are in a class by themselves, from the very brief, double cartwheel skirts of bright colors for the younger set, to the newest ankle length circular cut skirts for the more conservative enthusiast.

Again accessories complete the individual costume. Knitted hoods, coquettish caps, fancy knitted mittens, and bright colored socks all add up to the large sum of eye-catching color for the appreciative onlooker. One-piece dresses beloved of the aspiring professionals come in jersey, velveteen, and wool, with the circle skirts lined with contrast color material. Plaited huge plaids, cut in four gores that flare smartly, and velveteens offer a wide assortment of separate skirts from which to choose.

Simple Paris Frock Makes Smart Use of Embroidery

By Bettina Bedwell.

Trimming trends in Paris fashions have advanced from the use of color contrast and flowers to the use of beads, fringe, paillettes, and embroidery. It is the latter that is employed to advantage in the simple dress I've selected for today's presentation. It originated in one of the leading French salons, carrying on quietly but efficiently in spite of the almost crippling restrictions of the war.

The lines of this distinctive model, fashioned in the original of moss green crêpe, leave all the glory to the embroidery, which is done in gold colored thread, forming the outlines of petals. At either side of the V neckline there is deft shirring for softness. Sleeves are gathered casually below the elbow and puff at the shoulders. There is no belt, because the rather high waistline is fitted superbly to the midriff. In the skirt there are several panels to create flare.

All the misty, jewel, and solid tones will be good for this dress. It need not necessarily be made of crêpe, for sheer woolen is equally smart for this time of year.

Style No. 5323 is designed for sizes 12, 14, and 16, and 36, 38, 40, and 42 inches bust measurement. Size 36 requires 3⅛ yards of 39 inch material.

Address orders to Chicago Tribune Paris Patterns, 113 West 19th Street, NEW YORK CITY, inclosing 15 cents in stamps, or coin (coin preferred — wrap it carefully) for each pattern ordered. IMPORTANT! Be certain to state clearly the number of the pattern and the size desired, and write your name and address plainly.

Clotilde Children's Patterns

Fascinated by the many variations in fashions for little girls, designers too often overlook styles for future Presidents of the United States and college deans! But not this writer, for a special friend asked us to create a suit for her young son, and the pattern presented today is the result. The original outfit is made of woolen gabardine, but twill, flannel, tweed, and serge are equally serviceable and offer a varied range of usefulness from dressiness to the sturdiness needed for school wear.

The pattern makes jacket, trousers and matching cap, with which cotton broadcloth shirtwaists may be worn. The short trousers are cut with tailored fulness, and the coat is quite long, in the manner of those the British boys wear. There is no collar on the coat. The cap closely resembles the headgear of baseball players, the heroes of almost every small youth.

As a sensible economy measure, we suggest that a suit the boy's father no longer wears may be given longer service by using the fabric to fashion this outfit.

Style No. 2935 is designed for sizes 4, 6, 8, and 10. Size 8 requires 1⅞ yards of 54 inch material for all three items.

Feminine Gifts This Christmas Are Sumptuous

By Bettina Bedwell.

NEW YORK [Special].—Christmas this year will have more meaning for the denizens of this country than to any other people. For us "peace on earth" still is a fact, and not merely a hope, or the saddest memory of something lost. Whatever we get, or give to friend or family, there's going to be no gift as precious or important as this one of peace.

Thousands of miles of glittering shop windows all over the nation are suggesting that Christmas is coming, and that we can take the gift of "peace on earth" for granted, while we get busy on that list of presents for which the displays are enticing suggestions. The "shop early" slogan is a practical rule, and the early shopper will get the best of all the magnificence that's making a carnival of the shopping streets everywhere. Later on what you'll get, altho nice, will be what other fore-handed folks didn't want.

I think there never has been such a variety of gifts. Once you see them you'll think how empty life has been up to now, and here is just what was required to fill it brimful. There's white magic on the lingerie counters. Icy white nightgowns, slips, and other lingerie items, hand sewn, of delicate silks, and trimmed with the kind of delicate detail no right minded woman can live without, is the newest kind of Christmas gift. There also are lingerie gifts in colors for other tastes, and a magpie, two color kind of lingerie that's new and exciting.

Hostess gowns and lounging robes are better than ever, for important presents. The kind of tailored robe that's better done here than anywhere in the world, in flannel, silk, or quilted material, is one of those foolproof gifts. In the hostess gown of the glamor school, the gentry who make such things have used every trick of luscious material, seductive line, and rich trimmings. Velvet, satin, wool, and chiffon make these gowns, and they are coming out in colors that guarantee beauty at home.

Another item that every right minded woman dreams of finding in her Christmas stocking is fur. She may hope for something in the way of a fur coat with a five figure price tag, or her ambitions may be no bigger than a pint size, chic little muff, or one of those silly, irresistible little fur hats. Whatever she wants, the shops have it, and in every price and grade of pricelessness. There are many fur, and fur trimmed stoles, this being one of the chic styles of the season.

Hat and muff sets are high powered Christmas gift suggestions. These are being worn for day and evening, and they are copied in inexpensive fur that is most effective. One model shown is made of burgundy silver fox, and if you can't make any gift as extensive [spell it with a "p" if you like] a jeweled pin in the toque also makes a pretty swell present in the lower cost brackets.

Jewelry is any lady's present, and a lot of the costume stuff to be found is as splendid and barbaric looking as some little item a maharajah might fancy. Heavy necklaces in pirate gold, carved in huge beads, between square set plaques of red and green stones are a "must" to any woman or girl this season. All-gold necklaces, jeweled ones, or half-and-half, are magnificent looking and very effective gifts for a particular recipient. Personal jewels for the sophisticated woman are plentiful all over.

A personality handbag, a canteen shape of black suede with embossed gold leather sides, showing an antique rising sun motif, is for the particular woman who knows and loves nice things.

Intimate gifts have a sure appeal for the lady on the receiving end of a Christmas list. Some new magpie stepins have a top made of white guipure lace, and the culottes of black chiffon.

Contract According to Culbertson

By Ely Culbertson.

[Copyright: 1939: By Ely Culbertson.]

There must be millions of bridge players like my friend, John Jones. Not so long ago he played the South hand of this deal:

NORTH
♠ 10 6
♥ K Q 5
♦ A Q J 8 3
♣ K 8 5

WEST
♠ K Q J 9 3
♥ 10 8 2
♣ Q 10 6

EAST
♠ 8 5 2
♥ J 9 7 4
♦ K 5 4
♣ 9 4 2

SOUTH
♥ A 6 3
♦ 10 9 7
♣ A J 7 3

The bidding [neither side vulnerable]:

North	East	South	West
1 diamond	Pass	2 no trump	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	Pass	Pass

The bidding, of course, was perfectly sound, but not as much could be said of the play. West led the king of spades and Jones won at once with his ace. After toying for a while with the idea of developing the clubs, he finally chose to take the diamond finesse. East naturally took the king of diamonds and returned a spade, and after that there was very little comfort for poor Jones.

Perhaps my good friend would have attributed his downfall to bad luck if it had not been for his partner. After all, if West had held the king of diamonds, Jones would have made his contract. But North was not going to let South console himself so easily. He pointed out that the contract should have been made regardless of the position of the diamond king. Jones had merely to hold on to his ace of spades until the third time the suit was led—a play known to thousands of bridge players as the holdup. Then he could take the diamond finesse in safety. When East took his king of diamonds, he would have no spades; and any return other than a spade, of course, would permit Jones to take the rest of the tricks. North also pointed out that Jones would have made his contract even if East had four spades instead of only three. In that case, the opponents would be limited to three spades and one diamond.

Jones was much impressed by the lesson—he decided that he had been on the wrong track for years. From then on he wasn't going to take an ace until the opponents practically pried it loose from his hand. That's why I said before that there must be millions of bridge players like him. Bridge has no "always" and no "nevers." The holdup play is a very good one, but there are times when it should not be used.

Perhaps it will make the point clearer if I show a couple of hands that Jones ran into a little after he had learned his big lesson. Here's the first one:

NORTH
♥ 8 7 3
♦ Q 9 5 2
♣ A K Q 10

WEST
♠ K 7 5 3
♥ Q J 6 2
♦ K 6
♣ 8 7 4

EAST
♠ J 10 9 8 4
♥ K 10 4
♣ 9 5 2

SOUTH
♥ A 9 5
♦ A J 10 8 3
♣ J 6 3

The bidding [neither side vulnerable]:

South	West	North	East
1 diamond	Pass	2 clubs	Pass
2 no trump	Pass	3 diamonds	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the deuce of hearts, East played the king, and Jones played low. He wasn't going to make the same mistake twice. They'd have to lead the suit quite a bit more before they got him to take his ace!

But Jonesy got quite a shock when East abandoned the hearts and switched to the jack of spades. You can easily see what happened from then on. Jones naturally finessed the queen of spades, losing to West's king. A spade return knocked out South's ace. Later on, West got the lead with the diamond king and then the spades swamped poor Jones.

Of course, this was one time Jones should not have held up. Regardless of the length of the heart suit, the holdup was sure to be meaningless. The contract could be made only if the diamonds were brought in; and the diamond finesse had to be taken towards West. Everything would be fine if East held the diamond king; otherwise, South had to hope that only three heart tricks could be taken against him. This seemed probable since West's lead had been the deuce of hearts. [A deuce usually indicates a four card length.]

If South had taken the ace of hearts and then gone over to one of dummy's clubs in order to take the diamond finesse, he would have made his contract. The opponents could have taken three hearts and a diamond, but then South would have won the rest. In holding up, Jones overlooked the fact that the suit originally opened was not as dangerous as spades; and that however dangerous the hearts were, the holdup could not eliminate the danger.

Jones made a mental note that it did not pay to hold up when that would permit a shift to an even more dangerous suit. But that decision did not help him when he came face to face with this deal:

NORTH
♠ A 6
♥ Q 7 4
♦ K 7 3
♣ K Q J 9 3

WEST
♠ Q J 8 5 3
♥ 9 5 2
♦ Q 8 4
♣ A 5

EAST
♠ K 4
♥ 10 8 6 3
♦ J 9 5 2
♣ 8 6 2

SOUTH
♠ 10 9 7 2
♥ A K J
♦ A 10 6
♣ 10 7 4

The bidding [neither side vulnerable]:

North	East	South	West
1 club	Pass	2 no trump	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the five of spades, and Jones thought for a second or two. He wasn't afraid of a shift to any other suit, so he decided to hold up dummy's ace of spades. East won the first trick with the spade king and returned the suit, knocking out dummy's ace. On the next trick, West got the lead with the ace of clubs and ran the rest of his spades, defeating the contract.

Jones couldn't figure that one out. How could he have prevented this mishap?

The answer, of course, was that this was another case in which South should not have held up. An expert would analyze the hand something like this: "I have nothing to fear if the spades are split 4-3; for I can well afford to give up three spade tricks in addition to the ace of clubs. I am in trouble only if West has led from a five card spade suit. But, I know that West cannot have the K-Q-J of spades—for with those cards he would have led the king instead of the five spot. Therefore, East must have at least one honor. And if West has five spades, East can have only two."

Acting on this analysis, the expert would play dummy's ace of spades. If East played his low spade, the suit would be blocked. South could knock out the ace of clubs and a spade lead would be taken by East's king—but then East would have to relinquish the lead to South. Even if East decided to drop the king of spades under dummy's ace at the first trick, the defenders could not defeat the contract. In that case West could take the queen and jack of spades after gaining the lead with the ace of clubs. But then South's spade ten would act as a second stopper.

I hope that no one will conclude from this article that the holdup play is to be condemned. Actually, it is one of the most useful plays in all bridge, but even so important a weapon should not be used indiscriminately. As my friend Jones found out, it doesn't pay to hold up when a shift of suits is to be feared more than a continuation of the original suit; nor is the holdup a good idea when that will permit the opponents to unblock their best suit.

An article by Mr. Culbertson appears in the feature section of The Tribune each weekday.

South's contract is six hearts. West leads the queen of spades, dummy plays low, and East trumps. How must South play to make his contract?

Answer—South must drop the ace of spades! Regardless of what East returns, South wins and runs four trumps, then cashes his high cards in diamonds and clubs. When South leads his last trump, he has left a low spade and two minor suit nines. West has the J-10 of spades and two minor suit queens; and dummy has the king and three small spades. If West discards a minor suit queen, South will immediately cash the nine of the same suit, squeezing West once more.

A FRIEND IN NEED

If you are in need, perhaps I can help you. If you have household articles or clothing you no longer use, please let me place them with needy families. Address correspondence to Sally Joy Brown, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago. Activities of this department are sponsored by The Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc.

By Sally Joy Brown.

If you feel the urge to help those in need, as most of us do, particularly when the holidays are approaching, here's an opportunity to do so without the expenditure of money.

Many families of small or moderate incomes have numerous useful items to spare in their homes. The articles requested in the appeals I bring to your attention today, for instance, are just everyday, ordinary things which most people have on hand.

If the basement or attic shelters one or more of the items needed, won't you let us know? It's a way to bring actual comfort to others without cost to yourself.

Perhaps your youngsters have reached the age where a full sized bed would make an opportune Christmas gift. If so, the smaller bed to be discarded would be appreciated by the T. family on the northwest side of the city. Their little son, aged 6, is soon to be released from the hospital where he underwent a severe operation. The crib in which he formerly slept is too small for him, and, if he is to gain strength, he needs a more comfortable bed. His father has been ill for the last two years, with little hope for recovery.

If you recently purchased a new rug, won't you let the K. family have the discarded one? Their home, which is west of the loop, is damp and cold. The floors all are bare, and rugs would help to combat the cold. There are several small children in the family, and they also are in need of bedding of all kinds.

• • •

Mrs. K., a worker on the extreme south side of the city, has requested a double bed and mattress for a family of seven. They have been living in undesirable quarters but recently were able to move, and are much in need of an extra bed. The worker will arrange transportation.

• • •

A full sized bed also is needed in the B. home on the south side. There are five children in the family, and sleeping arrangements are crowded and uncomfortable. The father is unemployed at the present time.

• • •

Because of the shortage of beds, two of the children in the C. family are sleeping on a mattress on the floor in their home on the near north side. After a long illness, the father recently was released from the hospital but still is unable to work, and the family is on relief. A full sized bed would provide sleeping quarters for three of the smaller children.

The G. family would appreciate almost any item of furniture. They rented a basement flat, since the father only recently found work at a very small salary. Living room, dining room, or kitchen furniture, a dresser, and rugs of any kind would help to make their home more comfortable.

• • •

The F. family needs a single bed and a table and chairs. One girl is ill and receiving treatment at a hospital for a muscular disorder. It is imperative to her health that she have a comfortable bed to herself. The worker will arrange transportation to the address on the north side of the city.

The Stamp Collector

By Richard McP. Cabeen

Mr. Cabeen will answer questions about stamps, except concerning values. Do not ask where stamps may be sold, as the Stamps and Coins advertising section adjoining contains offers to buy and sell. Inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

This cover shows the new Cuban set, which was issued to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Gen. Calixto Garcia, revolutionary patriot of that country. Gen. Garcia was famous during the Spanish-American war period as the recipient of the "Message to Garcia." This cover was lent by Martin Baron of Chicago.

Th first international postal card with paid reply was described in a recent column. This card was printed in blue and was issued to postoffices from March 1, 1893, until March 18, 1924, when new supplies in red replaced it. Each portion of the card has a stamp value of 2 cents and may be readily distinguished from the 2 cent domestic card with paid reply by the inscriptions [in English only on the domestic cards and in French and English on the international cards].

A recent column contained a description of the 3 cent, red, international card, which was first issued on Jan. 29, 1926. On this same date a 3 cent red, international card with paid reply was placed on sale. The latter is almost identical in design with the single 3 cent card and likewise bears the portrait of McKinley. Each portion of the paid reply card measures 5½ by 3½ inches, and the two portions are divided by a line of rouletting to assist in separating the cards.

The portrait selected is a profile of McKinley, facing the left. This is placed in a circular medallion without background and framed with inscriptions, ornaments, and so forth, to fill out the rectangular form of the stamp. A label conforming to the curve of the medallion contains the words "Message Card," or "Reply Card," as the case may be, and below the medallion is a caption reading "McKinley," and the value label "Three Cents" flanked at either side by a large numeral.

The international character of the card is made evident by the bilingual inscriptions "Universal Postal Union," and "United States of America," which appear in the upper left corner of the card. Each portion of the card bears the admonition "This side of card is for address only," but the advice "Detach annexed card for answer," which appears on the message portions of previous international paid reply cards is missing. Each half of the card is framed with a single line border with small square boxes at the corners, and at the top, the border forms a panel for the bilingual inscriptions "Postal Card with Paid Reply," or "Reply Postal Cards," as the case may be.

All lettering in the stamps is Roman except that used for the caption "McKinley." This and the remainder of the lettering on the card is Gothic. The Roman lettering is colorless upon a dark ground, while the Gothic lettering is in color upon a white ground, excepting only the bilingual inscription at the top of the reply portion of the card which is colorless upon a red field.

Both of the international paid reply cards described in this article are in use today and may be obtained at larger postoffices.

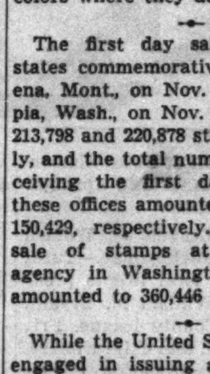
The postal authorities are receiving no small amount of criticism for the substitution of a 10 cent value for the 1½ cent value tentatively selected for the Famous Americans series. The loudest critics are the first day cover dealers who have been advertising the set of covers at a fixed price. Altho the entire business of commemorative stamps is decidedly commercial, there has been little to criticize in the last 15 years, for the sets have been confined to necessary values or to consecutive values. Collectors look upon the selection of a 10 cent stamp in the Famous Americans series as a direct attempt to exploit them, since there is no rate in ordinary mail for which that value applies. It cannot be excused as an air-mail rate without explaining why the 6 cent domestic air rate was overlooked. Assuming that first day cover collectors will require about 250,000 sets, the postoffice department stands to gather in $150,000 more that had the 1½ cent value been used.

A new process is in use for printing the bi-colored and multi-colored stamps of France. In the past, it has been necessary in the case of engraved stamps to make a plate for each color and to print separately from each plate. As a consequence there have been numerous examples of poor registry and very often one or more colors have been inverted.

The recent Red Cross foundation issue, the birth rate fund issue, and the postal museum issue were printed from single plates such as are designed for stamps in a single color. The inking of the plates is done with rollers, one for each color, which have been cut out so that each inks only that portion of the plate which is to be printed in the particular color. The wiping of the plate is more in the nature of blotting up the surplus than of wiping, as the latter method would undoubtedly mix the colors where they adjoin.

The first day sales of the four states commemorative stamp at Helena, Mont., on Nov. 8, and at Olympia, Wash., on Nov. 11, amounted to 213,798 and 220,878 stamps, respectively, and the total number of covers receiving the first day postmark at these offices amounted to 130,273 and 150,429, respectively. The first day sale of stamps at the Philatelic agency in Washington, on Nov. 13, amounted to 360,446 copies.

While the United States was busily engaged in issuing a stamp to celebrate the 300th anniversary of printing in colonial America, Mexico proceeded to celebrate on her own account by issuing a series of stamps in honor of the 400th anniversary of printing in Mexico, the first in America.



Since those who proposed the United States stamp were well aware of the progress made in Spanish America long before the first colonist settled along the Atlantic seaboard, it seems that a more precise inscription could have been selected for the United States stamp. The stamp illustrated shows a portrait of Juan de Zumarraga, and is shown thru the courtesy of John Stewart Campbell of Chicago.

For Quick Cough Relief, Mix This Remedy, at Home

No Cooking. No Work. Real Saving.

Here's an old home remedy your mother probably used, but, for real results, it is still one of the most effective and dependable, for coughs due to colds. Once tried, you'll swear by it.

It's no trouble at all. Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments until dissolved. No cooking is needed—a child could do it.

Now put 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle, and add your syrup. This makes a full pint of truly splendid cough medicine, and gives you about four times as much for your money. It keeps perfectly and tastes fine.

And you'll say it's really amazing, for quick action. You can feel it take hold promptly. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and helps clear the air passages. Thus it eases breathing, and lets you sleep.

Pinex is a compound containing Norway Pine and palatable guaiacol, in concentrated form, well-known for its prompt action on throat and bronchial membranes. Money refunded if not pleased in every way.

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

Chicago Sunday Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

WORLD'S GREATEST STORIES

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1939.

FOREWORD The Fiction Section today presents a short-story version by Winston Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, of Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, "Jane Eyre," which was first published in August, 1847. Mr. Churchill, who besides being a statesman of high attainments is a remarkable figure in the modern literary world, has here retold the celebrated early Victorian romance by Miss Bronte in a manner that makes its plot and situations clear to the reader and its characters living and breathing persons. Charlotte Bronte, who wrote with extreme frankness considering the prudery of her time, was the most famous of three sisters who achieved distinction as novelists. The other two were Emily and Anne. Charlotte was born in Thornton, England, April 21, 1816, and died at Haworth, England, March 31, 1855. The second story of the Fiction Section, "He Loved Her So," by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, is, as its title indicates, a love tale. It is a story woven around the lives of a young man and a young woman who by an unusual set of circumstances are thrown together in the historic old principality of Monaco on the Mediterranean.

WHEN Jane begins to tell her own story she is a little girl of ten, and the year must be 1799 [the date is given by the publication of Marmion, 1808, when she was nineteen]. She is an orphan, eating the bitterest bread of unkind charity. Her mother had alienated her pompous family by marrying a poor clergyman, but when both parents died three months after Jane was born her rich uncle, Mr. Reed of Gateshead house, took pity on the poor little mite and sent for her, and when he, too, died he had left her as a sacred charge to his widow, a hard, selfish, purse proud woman with three objectionable "darlings" of her own, against whom the orphan had no chance at all.

Jane is already completely herself, for as the reader perceives in retrospect, she is a character of such natural harmony and finish that every trait which experience develops in her was present in little from the first. Very small, very pale, with marked irregular features; in her person as neat and clean as a cat; outwardly conventional, and with an intense yearning for a "respectability" in which one is made to feel that there is nothing incompatible with a sovereign independence of spirit. The core of her nature is self-respect and a burning pride. She has no vanity, no self-assertion for its own sake; indeed, it is a luxury for her to yield herself to the dominance of a strong nature, but only up to a point—sooner or later the influence reaches a hard kernel of resistance from which it falls powerless away.

Her speech has a tang which makes every sentence she utters unmistakably hers. Her directness and accuracy of vision translates itself into language of simplicity and force; with precise taps she hits on the head nails which her disconcerted interlocutor had never known were there, and thus an effect of ironic humor, for which she has not striven, is added to her. Sentimentality is impossible for her, but when her depths are shaken the molten words of passion can flow forth from her lips.

Such was the little creature who, on a winter afternoon, fell innocently foul of her tyrannous aunt, and on a mild attempt at self-defense was sent out of the room to be neither seen nor heard. She ensconced herself, with "Bewick's Birds," behind the curtains of a window seat, but soon the brutal, pasty faced young hopeful routed her out, seized her book and flung it at her, knocking her down and cutting her forehead. She flew at him like a wild thing, and as they grappled Mother Reed came bustling in to the rescue of her beloved and locked Jane up in the redoubtable red room, which was kept as it was when Mr. Reed died in it and was supposed by Jane to be haunted by his ghost. Presently, overcome with terror, she began to scream and the comparatively good natured servant, Bessie, took mercy on her, but Mrs. Reed came up once more, thrust her back into the dark room, and turned the key again. Jane was at the end of her tether and fell down in a fit.

Rebel Jane Is Packed Off to Girls' School

After this things went worse than ever. Jane's indignation and resentment made a rebel of her; next time John was cruel she bit him and whenever she came to loggerheads with her aunt she told her home truths with such vigor and justice that the older woman quailed before her. At last it was settled that for all sakes Jane must go to school, and Gateshead house received a visit from the Rev. Mr. Brocklehurst, treasurer and patron of a school for poor girls called the Lowood institution.

Jane was sent for to be put thru her paces and it is impossible to give a better idea of her conversational methods than by extracting one or two of their exchanges.

"Do you know where the wicked go after death?" asked the formidable parson.

"They go to hell."

"And what is hell?"

"A pit full of fire."

"And should you like to fall into that pit?"

"No, sir."

"What must you do to avoid it?"

"I must keep in good health and not die . . ."

"Do you read your Bible?"

"Sometimes."

"Are you fond of it?"

"I like Revelations and Daniel and Genesis and a little bit of Exodus and Job and Jonah."

"And the Psalms? I hope you like them?"

"No, sir, Psalms are not interesting."

There is no space to recount the torments which Jane underwent at Lowood, where she spent the next eight years without a break. It was a feminine counterpart of Dotheboys Hall and Miss Brontë describes it with all Dickens' fervor of indignation and pity, but without a trace of comedy. After six years as a pupil she was two years a teacher.

At length she felt a crying want of something different—if not liberty, at least a different servitude. After characteristic reflection on so serious a step, she put an advertisment in the local paper which was answered by a Mrs. Fairfax, writing from Thornfield near Millcote [a large manufacturing town some 70 miles south of Lowood] offering her the charge of a little girl under ten, with £30 a year, and in due course she made the journey.

Thornfield was a large, stately, and comfortable country house belonging to a Mr. Edward Rochester, who was away from home. Mrs. Fairfax, a cozy old clergyman's widow, proved to be the housekeeper. Jane's pupil was a French girl, Adele Varens, a lively and affectionate but vain and feather pated little creature. She was the daughter, as Jane learned later, of a castoff mistress of Rochester's, adopted by a pitiful impulse, tho she was not his daughter, when he heard that her mother had died and left her destitute.

Next morning Mrs. Fairfax showed Jane over the house, and with her starved instincts of refinement and order she found it eminently to her liking. There was only one disquieting occurrence. As they passed along a corridor on the third floor a strange, mirthless laugh was heard from one of the rooms. It ceased and broke out again, clamorous, tragic, preternatural. Mrs. Fairfax called, "Grace!" and an entirely matter of fact, middle aged woman, with red hair and a hard, plain face, came out of the room.

"Too much noise," said Mrs. Fairfax; "remember directions." Grace curtsied and went back—the last person from which Jane would have expected such an exhibition, yet it must have been she who laughed.

Three months passed without event and Jane became restless and dissatisfied. An early feminist, she chafed like any suffragette under the restrictions in which it was prescribed that the women of that time should acquiesce, content to make puddings, knit stockings, play on the piano, and embroider bags. In thoughts like these she would pace the corridor, often hearing Grace Poole's curious murmurs and cachinnations, seeing her come out of her room, go to the kitchen, and return with nothing more sinister than a pot of porter.

The Master Unhorsed Before Her Eyes

At last something happened! Jane set out on a winter afternoon to post a letter for Mrs. Fairfax at a village two miles off and, after a mile uphill, sat down on a stile to rest. A horse's hoofs were heard and an enormous dog appeared round the bend of the road, followed by a tall steed and its rider. As they passed the horse slipped on a frozen puddle and came crashing to the ground. The rider, who had been unseated, managed to get the horse up, but his ankle was sprained. Jane offered her help and, as he sat on the stile to recover, she could study his looks.

His face was dark with stern, granite hewn features, black hair and a heavy brow, his body thickset, his expression angry and thwarted; he seemed about 35 years old. Jane tried and failed to lead the horse to him and, laying a heavy hand on her shoulder, with a smile for her gallant failure, he limped up to the animal and mounted. A few words passed between them in which it came out that she was the governess at Thornfield, and he rode on, telling her to post her letter and return as fast as she could. She finished her errand in a state of vague excitement and exaltation and, when she came home, learned from Mrs. Fairfax, as she expected, that the master had arrived.

A new routine was now set up at Thornfield. Every evening Jane put on her black silk dress and sat and talked with Rochester while Mrs. Fairfax kept Adele occupied in another part of the room. A curious intimacy and sympathy gradually sprang up between the two. Jane's dry, pointed, unexpected answers, never once failing to "keep her end up," amused and charmed him, and by her pride and independence he divined a kindred spirit.

His rare visits to Thornfield had usually been for a week at most, but under this new attraction he stayed eight, and Jane, on her side, was evidently falling head over ears in love. If he had been an Adonis, or any smooth and polished charmer, she would have frozen against him, but with his bluntness, his rugged rough hewn sternness, and the rarity and evanescence of his gentler moments, she was at home and at ease. Yet sometimes he took her out of her depth with a mysterious allusion to "unexampled circumstances" calling for a new rule of life to suit them, but she was content not to understand.

Then, one night when Jane was lying awake in bed and pondering these things in her heart, she was startled by a peculiar and lugubrious murmur overhead and some one seemed to touch her door. Thinking it might be the dog, Pilot, she was dozing off when she heard a demoniac laugh at her keyhole.

"Who is there?" she cried.

There was a gurgle and a moan and steps mounting the staircase, then a door opened and closed. Could it be Grace Poole? She set out to find Mrs. Fairfax, but from Rochester's door came smoke and a smell of burning and, rushing in, she found him asleep under blazing curtains. In a moment she had emptied his jug and basin on the flames and torn to fetch her own. Not till the fire was quenched did Rochester awake.

Leaving her in the dark, he went upstairs and soon returned, telling her that it was "as he thought," and seeming to accept her theory that the incendiary was Mrs. Poole. Then he told her to say nothing about what had happened and go to her room.

"Good night, sir," she said, but as she turned away he caught her arm and told her she had saved his life and she was the only person to whom he could bear to owe such a debt.

"I feel your benefits no burden, Jane," he said, and she spent the rest of the night in a turmoil of hope, joy, doubt, and surmise.

In the morning she found Mrs. Poole in Rochester's room, calmly sewing rings on new curtains for his bed. To Jane's astonishment she showed no confusion or shame, but merely asked if she had been disturbed in the night and advised her in the future to bolt her door. It was all very mysterious.

Rochester Is Host at a House Party

All day she pined for a sight of Rochester, but at supper Mrs. Fairfax told her that he had gone on a visit to a neighboring country house, the Leas, where he was to meet the region queen of beauty, the Honorable Blanche Ingram, with whom Mrs. Fairfax hinted that he was more than likely to make match. Jane spent the next fortnight castigating herself on the presumption of her hopes, and then Rochester came back, bringing with him the entire house party from the Leas, including the Honorable Blanche, an empty ,spoiled creature who quite genuinely believed that her beauty made her the most important person in the world, not only to herself but to everybody, and who in great measure "got away with it."

But not with Rochester! Jane knows him too well and she savors the irony of his gallantries, but she has no doubt that he means to marry her—she had heard of "marriages de convenance," and this, of course, was also.

The party drags on in a ceaseless round of gayeties and one evening a stranger arrives—a Mr. Mason from Jamaica—who on learning that Rochester is detained at Millcote says he is an old friend and will stay. He is a great success with the house party, but Jane tracks down the weakness in his handsome face. When Rochester comes home she is the first to see him, and she tells him of the arrival. He goes white and a spasm catches his breath.

"Jane, I've got a blow!" But he pulls himself together and tells her to send Mason to him, and later Jane hears his cheerful, carefree voice as he shows his guest to his room.

A cry in the night from the room over Jane's; a struggle, shouts of "Help!" and "Rochester!" steps running along the corridor and the thud of a fall! Jane and all the guests rush out of their bedrooms and Rochester appears with a candle from above. The women cluster round and hang on him.

"All's right!" he says. "Ladies, keep off or I shall grow dangerous."

And dangerous he looked, with his black eyes darting sparks. A servant had a nightmare, he explains, and they can go to sleep in peace. Jane goes to her room and puts on her clothes. After an hour she hears a tap.

"Are you dressed? Come out quickly," and there is Rochester in the passage with a light. Telling her to bring a sponge and some sal volatile, he takes her to a tapestried room over her own. From an inner chamber comes a snarling, snatching noise, like a dog quarreling. Rochester goes in, and thru the door comes Grace Poole's laugh and the sound of a low voice. Coming out again he leads Jane round the curtained bed where Mason sits soaked in blood.

Rochester goes for a doctor, leaving Jane to sponge the wounds, with the strict injunction not to say a word. The horror of the next two hours, between the apparently dying man in one room and the unknown grisliness which might at any moment rush out upon her from the other, may be imagined according to the reader's aptitude for gooseflesh.

At dawn Rochester returns with the surgeon, Carter. Mason has been bitten as well as knifed.

"She worried me like a tigress when Rochester took the knife from her," the poor weakling gibbers with recovered speech. "She sucked my blood—she said she would drain my heart."

But the injuries are not serious. Rochester sends Jane to see that the coast is clear and packs Mason off with Carter in a chaise. Then, in the divinely clear and dewy morning he walks with Jane in the garden and gives her a rose, hinting the while at a mysterious case of conscience. Suppose a young man had been betrayed in his early years, not into a crime, but a hideous error which had laid his life in ruin—and then, after a long lapse of time a way of salvation opened before him, but one which the law of man forbade him to tread—would God forgive him if he took it? Then he changed his tone and with grim banter asked Jane if she would watch with him once more, the night before his marriage to Miss Ingram.

Summoned to Bedside of Her Dying Aunt

Next day the old coachman from Gateshead arrived with shocking news of the Reed family. The hopeful John had gone to the dogs and killed himself after squandering half his mother's fortune. Aunt Reed herself had had a stroke and must imperatively see Jane before she died. She went—all that was so long ago she had no feeling left about the Reeds.

Her aunt had a confession to make; when Jane had been some years at Lowood an Eyre uncle had written from Maderia to inquire about her, as he had put by a comfortable fortune and wished to make her his heiress, but Mrs. Reed, in her vengeful malice, had answered that the little girl had died of the typhus outbreak. This is all that need be told of the Gateshead visit, from which Jane returned to Thornfield after a month's absence.

Rochester was sitting on a stile, gazing at the house. He received her with his rare, enchanting smile and spoke of Thornfield as her home. As she was leaving him to go indoors a force within her turned her toward him again. "Thank you, Mr. Rochester," she said. "Wherever you are is my home—my only home."

Both their guards had been down for the moment, but a fortnight passed without event, only, to Jane's surprise nothing was said of the marriage with Blanche. Then, on midsummer eve, he followed her thru the flowers to the orchard and began to talk in his most tormenting mood. He had found her a place in Connaught, with a Mrs. Dionysius O'Gall of Bitternutt lodge. She would cross the channel and the cord of communion between them would be snapped; she would forget him and he would take to bleeding inwardly.

She burst into sobs and told him of the agony and the necessity of parting from him, and he took her in his arms.

"Don't struggle so," he said, "like a wild, frantic bird rending its own plumage."

He has disentangled himself from Blanche, he tells her, by making her believe that he had lost his money, and he asks her to be his wife. As he holds her in his arms he prays to God for forgiveness, washes his hands of the world's opinion, defies the judgment of man. A violent storm drives them into the house and that night the great horse chestnut on the lawn is shivered by lightning.

He took her to the shops in Millcote, wishing to cover her with silks and satins and jewels, but she would only have black satin and pearl gray silk—she felt as if she were in a harem, and in an anticipation of the modern woman's desire for "economic independence" she wrote to the uncle in Madeira, telling him she was alive. All thru the month which followed she kept Rochester tame with her old cool and gentle mockery.

Jane Tells of Strange Woman in Her Room

On the eve of the wedding day Jane was pacing the wind-blown orchard. Rochester was on his way back from a business journey and she had something to tell him. At 10 o'clock she walked out into the rainy dark to meet him. He picked her up on his horse and they had supper together, and when the clock struck midnight she told him of her troubled dreams the night before and how she woke to see a strange woman come into her room. She was tall and large, with thick black hair hanging long down her back, her dress white and straight, but whether gown, sheet, or shroud, Jane could not tell.

She took up the light from the table and Jane saw her face. It was discolored, inflated, savage; the lips swollen and dark, the brow furrowed, the black eyebrows widely raised over the rolling, bloodshot eyes. She gazed at the wedding dress hanging on the wall and presently, taking up the veil, put it on her head, tore it in pieces, flung them on the floor, and trampled on them. Then she came to the bed and thrust the candle close to Jane's face and, after a moment of frozen terror, Jane lost consciousness.

Rochester was deeply moved and, after some minutes' silence, told her that the apparition must have been Grace Poole. Jane was not convinced, but there seemed to be no other conceivable solution, and that night she lay sleepless in little Adele's bed with the child in her arms.

In the morning Rochester seized her hand in a grasp of iron and, as he hurried her along to the church, she wondered what other bridegroom had ever looked so grimly resolute, or under such steadfast brows revealed such flaming and flashing eyes. Into the churchyard came two men who slipped into the church by the back door and, when the clergyman put the "impediment" question one of them stepped forward and declared that the marriage could not go on.

Rochester moved slightly, as if an earthquake had rolled under his feet, and bade the priest "proceed," but the game was up. The interrupter was a London solicitor and his companion, Mason, who had heard of the contemplated marriage from Jane's Madeira uncle; and now the lawyer read an affidavit by Mason that Rochester had been married 15 years before at Spanish Town in Jamaica to his sister, Bertha, and that three months ago he had seen her alive.

Rochester, in his fury and despair, was defiant and, dragging the party to Thornfield and up the three flights to Grace Poole's room, he threw open the inner door. There was Grace, bending over a saucepan by the fire, and in the deep shade beyond a figure whose face was hidden by a wild mane of grizzled hair ran backwards and forwards on all fours, growling like a beast. At the sound of voices the clothed hyena stood up tall on its hind feet and bellowed, parting its shaggy locks so that Jane could recognize the purple and bloated features of her strange nocturnal visitant. Then it hurled itself on Rochester, grappling his throat and laying its teeth to his cheek. He would not strike, but after a fierce struggle he mastered its arms. Grace passed him a cord and he bound the yelling, plunging monster to a chair.

Then he turned on the others and spoke, with an acrid and desolate smile. "That is my wife," he said. "And this," laying his hand on Jane's shoulder, "is what I wished for—this young girl who stands so grave and quiet at the mouth of hell, looking collectedly at the gambols of a demon."

The ghastly scene was over and the strangers took their departure. Jane went to her room and, when she had changed her wedding gown for her old stuff dress, she sat down and thought. All her hopes were dead and her love shivered in her heart like a suffering child. Rochester was not to her what he had been, not what she had thought him, and she must leave him. As she came to this resolve the whole consciousness of her love lost, her hope quenched, her faith stricken to death, swayed above her in one sullen mass; in full, heavy surge the waters of affliction poured over her spirit.

Secret of His Marriage to Maniac Revealed

When at last she rose and went into the passage Rochester was keeping watch over her door. He picked her up in his arms and carried her to his sitting room; and there, when he had restored her with wine and food, battle was joined between them. What he wanted he must have; they were to cut clear of the past and begin a fresh life together at his villa in the south. With all his passion and eloquence and logic, with all the tyranny of his personal ascendancy, he strove to override her scruples and subdue her to his will; but her tenacity was equal to his, and with death in her heart, but yet with a kind of exhilaration, too, like an Indian guiding his canoe thru rapids, and as she confesses with a cool, feminine calculation of her resources, she held her ground and chose her moment for a long fit of weeping. The temperature of the scene was changed and with a calmer and still more touching appeal he told her the story of his marriage.

All the family fortune had been destined for his elder brother, but their proud and worldly father was determined that the younger son also should be rich and packed him off to Jamaica at the age of twenty-two to secure the 30,000 pound dowry of the beautiful Bertha Mason. The marriage was rushed, and not until he was irrevocably bound did Rochester discover what his father and brother had known all along, that his wife was a violent lunatic, a drunkard, and a libertine, her younger brother a dumb idiot, her mother in a padded room.

After four years of torment, in the course of which his father and brother died, Rochester had brought the poor maniac to England and installed her at Thornfield under the care of Grace Poole, an ideal wardress but for the one drawback of an occasional bout of hard drinking, in which her charge would slip her custody. Rochester went abroad and spent the next 10 years in an arid and miserable "life of pleasure," till he came home intending a flying visit, and saw Jane. Now he goes on, with the most delicate and penetrating understanding, to unfold the story of his relation with her, illuminating every incident with the sympathy which had led him by degrees to discover the treasures of her nature, and her priceless worth to him. Here was his mate in the eyes of God—were the laws of man forever to frustrate him?

Jane heard him in an agony of pity and tenderness; her very conscience and reason turned traitors against her and charged her with crime in resisting him. "Think of his misery," they clamored, "think of his danger; save him, love him, tell him you love him and will be his." Yet a still stronger voice forbade her. She must keep the law given by God, sanctioned by man; she must hold to the principles she had received when she was sane, not mad—as she was now.

Laws and principles were not for the time when there was no temptation; they were for such moments as this, when body and soul rise in mutiny against their rigor. Rochester read her countenance and in a last impulse to break her will he crossed the floor, seized her arms, and grasped her waist. He seemed to devour her with his flaming glance; physically she was powerless as stubble in the furnace; mentally she still possessed her soul, and with it the certainty of ultimate safety. Her eyes rose to his; he knew he was beaten and he let her go.

The interlude which follows can only be briefly sketched. Jane slips out of the house at dawn with 20 shillings in her pocket. She walks till she drops and then, hailing a coach going northward, persuades the driver to take her as far as he can for her pound. After a two days' journey this man, with unbelievable inhumanity which Jane neither accounts for nor condemns, puts her out at a crossroad miles from anywhere, on the ground that her fare is exhausted. Half starved already, she stumbles to a village; but a "genteel beggar" is a suspicious character, and she finds no one to show her mercy.

Wanderer on Moor Finally Is Befriended

For two days she wanders on the moor, eating nothing but wild bilberries and sleeping at night in the heather; and at last, after a long drawn agony which tears the reader's heart, she is taken in by a clergyman and his two sisters—the last representatives of an old but impoverished family—to their ancestral manor. Mary and Diana are girls after Jane's own heart, gentle, gifted, and true; and it is not long before they recognize her quality, and a delightful intimacy sets in between the three.

Their brother, St. John Rivers, is made of sterner stuff. Austere and despotic, of inflexible will, unmitigated piety, and flaming ambition, he has consecrated himself to the career of a missionary in which he has come to see the highest field for the powers of soldier, statesman, and orator which he feels within him. He studies Jane intently, considers her the ideal for a missionary's wife, and as a first step in his plans for her installs her as mistress of the village girls' school at 30 pounds a year. In this humdrum occupation, which wins her the affection of her pupils and the respectful good will of their parents, she finds peace and happiness, only broken by recurring thoughts of Rochester. More and more she feels assured that she did right to leave him, but she cannot forget him and is tortured with anxiety on his account.

Now comes a startling discovery. Jane has given her name as Jane Elliott, but one day St. John catches sight of her real name which she has unconsciously scribbled on a piece of drawing paper, and a light breaks on him. For weeks, as he knows from the papers, there has been a hue and cry after a Miss Jane Eyre, whose uncle has died in Madeira, leaving her sole heiress to his fortune of 20,000 pounds.

Rejecting John's formidable advances and drawn by a mysterious spell, she journeyed back to Thornfield. She quitted the coach and slipped away to the house, creeping round the wall to the spot which gave a view of the front. Merciful heavens, what did she see? The stately façade in ruins, lifeless, roofless, crumbling, blackened with the traces of fire. Back to the inn she sped to question the landlord.

A few months before, in the middle of the night, the mad woman in one of Grace Poole's drunken bouts had escaped from her confinement and set fire to the hangings in the next room and then in Jane's on the floor below. Rochester awoke and, after getting the servants out of the house, made for his wife's cell; but shouts from below warned him that she was on the roof, and thither he followed her. There she was, standing on the battlements, shrieking, with waving arms and hair streaming against the flames.

When Rochester appeared thru the skylight and called her name, she yelled, gave a spring, and the next moment lay smashed on the pavement. As Rochester rushed down the staircase there was a crash of falling beams; one of his eyes was put out and his left hand so crushed that it had to be amputated at once. Soon after the sight of the other eye had gone, and he was now living at Ferndean manor, blind and a cripple, looked after only by the old married couple, John and Mary, who had been coachman and cook at Thornfield.

Jane set out immediately, and before nightfall came to Ferndean. It was an old, decaying house, almost lost in thick woods; and as she studied it from the lawn, the door opened and Rochester appeared on the step—his form as strong and stalwart as ever, his hair as raven black; but in his sightless face there was a desperate and brooding look. Overcome with pity and tenderness, Jane followed him into the house. Rochester had constantly had visions of her return, and it was some moments before he could be convinced that this time it was no hallucination. But Jane took the old, matter of fact, teasing tone that had so taken his fancy when she was the governess and he the master, and soon they were at ease together.

It was yet longer before he could believe that she still wished to marry him; but when Jane was in earnest there was no mistaking her, and after a long talk that night and a still longer one next day, his doubts were washed away in the purest happiness.

"Jane suits me," he says at last. "Do I suit her?" And she makes her famous answer: "To the finest fiber of my nature, sir."

HE LOVED HER SO

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

(Copyright: 1939: By Marie Belloc Lowndes)

COULD the feeling which filled every cranny of his being be love? Bill Kesterton asked himself that question with a sensation of mingled exultation and dismay. Two months ago he had not only been heart-free but he had felt convinced that so he would remain for the rest of his life.

He was now 32, and 10 years before he had a disastrous affair with a brilliant, beautiful girl to whom, as a candid friend had told him too late, he had been just another scalp. Yet till seven weeks ago the memory of that episode still had the power to hurt and, above all, to awaken anew a profound contempt for women.

Seven weeks ago! At times it seemed like yesterday since he had first met Norah Curran in the hall of the Hotel Azur, a humble hostelry perched on the edge of the huge rocky promontory on which old Monaco is built. She and her invalid brother had then been the only other foreigners, and were now, with himself, the only guests left, for late May brings the breathless heat.

As he stood at the widely open window of the now dark room he had chosen as a study, and gazed across the Bay of Hercules to the twinkling lights of Monte Carlo, he lived again that first meeting which he now knew would affect his life as long as his life endured.

The hall of the Hotel Azur had once been the principal living room of an ancient house. It was always cool in there, and Kesterton had come in from the glare outside to see a group composed of Mme. Lotti, the shrewd, hard old woman who owned the hotel, the local postman, and a slight girl wearing a plain white frock. On the table lay a large postal packet, and a dispute was going on between the hotelkeeper and the postman, while the girl in the white frock looked from one to the other of the disputants with an expression of anxiety, and even distress, on her sensitive face.

As Kesterton came in Mme. Lotti turned to him and began explaining what the quarrel was about. The postman was refusing to leave the packet unless Miss Curran, to whom it was addressed, could produce her passport, which was in her invalid brother's room. Her brother was now asleep, so she had asked that the packet be brought back another time. But the postman was unwilling to take it away, as it was rather heavy, but as an alternative to the production of the passport he would accept the signature of a person who would guarantee its value, registered as five thousand francs.

The young lady suddenly turned to the stranger and, in a voice which struck pleasantly on his ear, she exclaimed: "My French is so bad! Would you mind explaining that he can bring back that parcel any time?" She waited a moment, then added: "It only contains a set of drawings which have been rejected by a publisher I thought had commissioned them. No one else is likely to have any use for them."

"As they're here, you had better have them now," said Kesterton firmly, "so, of course, I will sign the guarantee."

Girl Is Grateful to Kesterton for Favor

His young fellow-countrywoman exclaimed gratefully: "That is kind of you! The drawings are worth nothing now and I was anxious not to wake my brother, who is ill."

That had been the beginning of their acquaintance—even now he dared not call it their friendship. True, he had soon learned the little there was to know concerning Charles and Norah Curran. She was an artist, and as for her brother, the lad intended to be an architect. They had both ardently looked forward to studying in Paris, but after a few weeks Charles had neglected a cold which had developed into a condition making imperative a stay in a sanatorium with, as an alternative, a winter on the Riviera.

Kesterton had often wondered uneasily if Norah had even a suspicion of how serious was her brother's condition. Her devoted care of the invalid made painting or even drawing impossible, tho when they had happened to be alone for a few minutes a few words had escaped her which had told how much her art meant to her.

He had come to know every expression on the pale face whose large gray eyes fringed with dark lashes were the only beauty. Yet never had it occurred to him to ask himself why the two had settled on a place so thoroly unsuited to the requirements of one who was evidently slowly but surely drifting to that bourne from whence no mortal traveler returns. The Hotel Azur was lacking in all the amenities by which civilized men and women set, maybe exaggerated store.

True, it was quiet, clean, and, according to the dollar standard, phenomenally cheap, but that last fact had not weighed with Kesterton, for he had far more money than he required for his needs as scholar and writer. He himself had come there by chance, intending to spend but a few days. Then he had stayed on, feeling that in this place he could work in peace. But instead of peace he had found love. Yes, love, that "creature of infinite thirst and exquisite hunger," had caught him unaware, and obliterated the quietude of mind and body in which he had dwelt for so long.

Tho it was now close to two in the morning, he had only just got back from Monte Carlo, where he had intended to stay the night after spending the evening with the two daughters and the son of old friends of his parents called Jennings. He had not wanted to see them, and had been sorry they had discovered where he was staying.

Also he had hated being away, even for one evening, from Norah, for it was only after she had settled her brother for the night that she had the chance of a quiet, peaceful talk with her fellow guest.

Moreover, it had slightly irritated Kesterton that Miss Jennings' note of invitation had confessed they had lost so much money at the gambling tables that she hoped "good old Will" would not mind their having a Dutch treat. And what a wasted evening had followed!

Kesterton was generous by nature, but he had resented the absurdly extravagant expensive meal into which the Dutch treat had resolved itself. The three had insisted on going to an expensive restaurant, and it was as if they had deliberately chosen the most costly items on the menu. He had ended by insisting they be his guests and after he had paid the bill had not had enough money left for a night's lodging. As he stood at the window and gazed over the dark sea he now felt very glad he was back and would see Norah in the morning.

What He Saw Thru His Opera Glasses

Altho he still felt wide awake, he turned away at last and went into his bedroom. From there, at right angles, in a small two storied building Mme. Lotti styled the annex, he could see the windows of Charles and Norah Curran's two roomed apartment.

Tonight poor Charles must be sound asleep. Kesterton had been present when the kindly, old fashioned French doctor he had persuaded Norah to send for a day or two ago, when her brother had suddenly taken a turn for the worse, had brought the narcotic which would not only procure the invalid a good night but rest for the sister, too.

There was no electric light in the hotel, and before lighting one of the candles on his mantelpiece he went across to his open window meaning to close the shutters. And then he saw, with great surprise, that Norah Curran's room was brightly illuminated and that she was sitting in full view, behind a narrow table on which stood a lamp.

What could she be doing at this time of the early morning? Not drawing, surely? Yet he could see her hands—they were delicate, long, tapering hands—moving about over the table.

Mastered by an overpowering curiosity, while yet feeling very much ashamed of what he was about to do, he went to a drawer and took from it a pair of opera glasses. Putting them to his eyes, he suddenly saw her with a curious and startling clarity.

The girl was wearing a flesh colored wrapper, and her long, wavy hair was down. Shaken with conflicting emotions, which now seemed to come from heaven and now from hell, he sank down on his knees as does a pilgrim before a shrine, and gazed at her, secure in the knowledge that she believed him to be away for the night.

How young she looked! How defenseless! And how completely feminine and unconsciously alluring!

Suddenly she threw back her head and stared out at the darkness of the night. There swept over Kesterton a sensation of terror, for on her face was a piteous, indeed a fearful expression of anguish and a limitless despair.

Slowly he rose to his feet. How completely wrong he had been in his reading of the creature he loved. Of course she knew her brother was dying, but only when believing herself to be utterly alone did she allow herself to agonize, as she was agonizing now.

At last she bent again over the table and, shifting his opera glasses, her unseen watcher fixed his eyes on what lay before her. And then a tremor of dismay and extreme surprise ran thru him, for he saw two passports lying on the table. Could she be thinking of leaving Monaco? Surely in Charles Curran's condition that was quite impossible!

All at once she drew a small handbag which had been behind the lamp toward her, and from it she took a wad of French notes and spread them out before her. Then she extracted a handful of French coins, large and small, and counting over both notes and money she penciled the amount the whole came to on a piece of paper. What a strange time to choose to do such a thing as that!

Then he reminded himself that all thru the day she was in attendance on an invalid. Constantly Kesterton had tried to persuade her to go out for a short time, while he took charge of the boy. But only now and again, maybe twice a week, had he been successful, and then it was only because she had something to do in the town.

He had soon learned that in Norah Curran's nature there existed an almost fiercely determined streak. She would give in to any fancy, to any request however unreasonable, of her dying brother, but always she seemed to know exactly what it was she wished to do and, gently composed as was her manner, she was in some ways unexpectedly unconventional. Indeed, the man who loved her had had a curious example of that fact on what must now be called yesterday.

She had come down while he was eating his well cooked dejeuner, ordering for herself only a cup of coffee, and while Mme. Lotti had gone to make the coffee she had said in a low voice: "I wonder if we could meet for a few moments some time this afternoon. I want to ask you to do something for me."

No Privacy in Their Little Dining Room

They were each of them aware that every word uttered in the small dining room opening out of the hall could be heard by the hotelkeeper in the little cubby hole where she spent much of her day. In the long, long ago Mme. Lotti had been a lady's maid in England. She spoke English fairly well and understood it perfectly, and Kesterton had come to be uncomfortably aware that she watched him and Miss Curran closely whenever she had a chance of doing so.

She went on, hesitatingly: "I have to go out this afternoon with a prescription of Dr. Jacques'. Maybe we might meet for a moment outside the drug store? It's in the Rue Longue."

"That's only a few yards from the public garden. Let's meet there any time you say."

She murmured, "Let's say 5 o'clock."

How long that afternoon had seemed, tho they had been together for quite awhile in her brother's room. And as he waited for her in the narrow, sweet scented garden he had wondered what it was she wanted him to do for her, and asked himself if he would ever dare to say how much he loved her.

At last he saw her coming toward him, walking quickly, looking neither to the right nor to the left.

Side by side they walked down a winding path bordered by huge plants of flowering geraniums, till they came to a small, square opening where a low balustrade hung over the sea.

"Let's go over to that stone bench for a moment," he suggested. She was always on her feet; he had never seen her really resting. But now she obeyed him.

Opening her bag, she took out of it a hundred franc note. "I want you to risk this for me at roulette this evening, Mr. Kesterton. I shan't be surprised if you come back and tell me it's all gone, for I'm not a lucky person. But an Italian lady who dined at the hotel last week risked a hundred francs and made three thousand. I'll be content with a thousand!"

He had done what she had asked and tomorrow morning, when they met, he would have to tell her that her bad luck still held.

Kesterton slept late and it was 10 o'clock when he inquired if the basket of peaches and grapes, which was now a daily order, had been delivered. It had not arrived and he sat down with a newspaper to wait for it.

All at once he felt as if Mme. Lotti was willing him to raise his eyes. He did so, and saw her looking at him with a strangely fixed gaze.

"That poor young gentleman must be much worse." It was as if she was speaking to herself rather than to him, yet her watchful eyes never left his impassive face.

"What makes you think that?" he asked coldly.

"Because Miss Curran went out early this morning to discover the price of a grave in the Foreigners' cemetery."

A thrill of horror went thru him, but he said quietly, "What makes you suppose Miss Curran did that?"

"Because my nephew works in the Foreigners' cemetery. He saw her go up and stand before the board where the information is printed in English and in German, then she wrote something down in a little book."

Angered by the Words of Gossipy Mme. Lotti

There followed a strained silence. Kesterton was himself trembling with anger. For the first time in his life he longed to strike another human being.

Perhaps Mme. Lotti sensed she was in danger, for it was in a tone of relief that she exclaimed: "Ah! here is the so expensive fruit! It must be hoped poor young Mr. Curran will be able to eat it."

With a curt nod he seized the basket and hurried up to the Currans' apartment. He knocked on the door and as Norah opened it he saw that she looked her reserved, composed self. "Charlie is a little better this morning, Mr. Kesterton. He had a good night and he will be so glad to see you." And then in a low tone she added, "Your delicious peaches and grapes really do him good."

As he followed her into her brother's room he asked in a casual tone, "Have you been out this morning?"

She hesitated a moment, as if the sense of this question had not really touched her tired brain, and then she shook her head.

God! How fiercely he longed to force cruel Mme. Lotti to eat her lying words.

He stayed a while with the dying boy into whose life he knew he had brought real happiness, as well as comfort. And then he went out for a walk he hoped would quiet his jangled nerves. But a blast of heat struck him and instinctively he sheltered himself under the lee of a large new row of public buildings overlooking the gay public garden.

Even there the atmosphere was unendurable and almost did he go back to the hotel. Indeed there came a time when he asked himself what it was that had made him go on and on during that intolerably hot morning, till he reached the extreme end of the rock, from where there is a wonderful view of the coastline broken by promontories surrounded on three sides by translucent seas.

With an instinctive longing for coolness and shade, he turned into a narrow, sunless street where he had never been before. After walking slowly some way he stopped before the window of a queer little junkshop to see, propped up in the midst of copper drinking and cooking vessels and pots and pans of Italian crockery, a gaudily gilt frame containing six small water color paintings of old Monaco. They had a curious miniaturelike quality and one showed much the same view as that from the terrace of the Hotel Azur. The artist had slurred over the white, staring buildings of Monte Carlo, and concentrated on the picturesque mountain country beyond.

The only other of the little paintings which attracted his fancy showed a corner of the stone wall and bench which bounded the public garden on the sea side of the rock, for it was where he and Norah Curran had had their brief meeting of the day before.

Lure of Paintings Draws Him Into the Shop

He opened the door to the shop and a fat, shabby looking man came forward eagerly. What was the price of the water color drawings? The artist asked 200 francs apiece, but might take less. The frame would cost 300 francs and was well worth it.

The man looked expectantly at the stranger. Foreigners were so odd! If they liked an object they would generally give the price first asked without bargaining for it. If not, no offer of less would tempt them.

Kesterton meanwhile was making a quick calculation. Twelve hundred francs? Pitifully little in dollars and pounds for so much delicate, conscientious work! And no doubt the old chap would exact a big commission from the artist.

"I'll have them at that price, but only if you will sell them without the frame," he said quietly.

"That handsome frame, my good gentleman, represents my profit!" and the dealer's face assumed a look of despair.

"I'll give you 300 francs for a small, dull gilt frame, in which you will place two paintings which I shall select. I don't want the other four."

Eight peaceful days slipped by. Kesterton had discovered a place in Nice where huge blocks of ice could be procured, and he arranged to have two placed in young Curran's room at regular intervals. The first time this happened Norah followed the donor into the ovenlike little passage off the apartment and, breaking down in his presence for the first time, sobbed out incoherent words of gratitude.

On the ninth day there came a change, and the old doctor exclaimed, "You are that poor girl's fellow-countryman and her benefactor——" and as the younger man shook his head he said sharply: "Of course you are! What a miserable time she would have had these last few weeks had her guardian angel not brought you here. It's now your duty to prepare that poor devoted girl for the worst. But you can tell her that her brother will have what all should pray for, a peaceful passing."

Kesterton found his pitiful task far easier than he had thought it would be, for Norah only murmured, "I've been so dreadfully afraid that he might suffer at the end." And then, "Thanks to you he has had happy days and cool, peaceful nights."

"I said to her, for I have a good heart, 'Stay at your own price per week, Mees Curran.' After all, a hundred and fifty francs, which is the least she could have offered me, would have been better than a poke in the eye with a hard stick, as sometimes will say those comic British. Also she eats like a little bird and lives on black coffee.

"But no, yesterday evening, on her poor brother's funeral day, she actually went off and secretly hired a little garret in the lower town! But she had to have a reference and so I was rung up by the proprietor of the rooming house, and I had to admit she was honest and respectable. It seems she will soon be looking for pupils to whom to teach drawing."

Mme. Lotti was chatting to one of her cronies, and Kesterton, who had come up onto the terrace from outside, could hear everything without being seen.

So that was what Norah was going to do? Tho he had not seen her since he had handed her out of the huge mourning carriage, he had thought of her unceasingly, wondering anxiously how soon he might intrude upon her grief. Surely she was not meaning to leave the Hotel Azur without bidding him good-by?

"There is something very strange about that young lady," went on Mme. Lotti. "Scarce a tear, scarce a 'thank you' for my sympathy! And would you believe it? She was out of doors at 5 in the morning yesterday. Then she locked herself in her room till it turned dark, and again went out, as before, by the side door. She is actually out now, when I am thinking of going to bed!"

Kesterton heard a kinder voice observe, "Grief displays itself in unusual ways——"

"She's already given away her brother's clothes to the Blue Sisters, to be distributed among the poor, and I could have got her a nice round sum for them."

The eavesdropper, feeling sick at heart, turned away and went back into the great square which faces the old Palace of Monaco. A garret in the lower town? He shrank with horrified disgust at the vision the words conjured up. Surely she simply wished to get clean away from the associations, the hotel, and the hateful, all-pervading presence of Mme. Lotti.

Then suddenly he told himself that she must surely be now in the garden overhanging the sea. There was no other place in or near the town where a measure of solitude could be obtained.

He hurried along in the gathering darkness till he reached the narrow, now solitary pleasaunce. Suddenly he saw her. She was standing still, gazing over the rippling waters flecked here and there with silvery gleams of reflected light.

"May I speak to you?" he asked urgently.

She started. Shuddered. Then, in a still voice she answered him. "Why, of course, Mr. Kesterton."

They followed, side by side, the winding path which led to the place where she had asked him to risk for her a hundred francs at the gambling tables, and now, as then, there rose on the still air sweet, pungent scents.

Norah Reveals the Torture in Her Heart

All at once he heard her give a long, convulsive sigh, and that stuffless sound moved him to the heart. Taking her hand he led her to the stone bench. Her hand was cold, cold, and he prayed consciously for words with which to soothe and alleviate what he took to be her desolate sense of loss. How long a time must go by before she would allow him to tell of his love?

And then Norah Curran began speaking in a quiet, collected voice.

"You were so wonderfully good to my brother, Mr. Kesterton, and you have been so very, very kind and helpful to me, a stranger——"

A stranger? She?

"I had hoped you had come to regard me as a friend," he muttered.

But she went on as tho she had not heard him. "The first time we met, you guaranteed the value of a parcel of drawings. Now I had believed those drawings commissioned, but the publisher rejected them and, tho I had already had his letter saying so, when I saw the parcel a flood of bitterness overwhelmed me——" Again she stopped, but only for a moment. And it was with a dreadful clearness that she ended her sentence with "and I became a murderess in my heart."

Kesterton told himself that her mind had given way under the strain she had endured, and even more did he believe it when she added, "I could not allow you to go on thinking me an ordinary good woman, when I knew that I have been a frightfully wicked woman."

She was looking straight [illegible] her, her face rigid, and [illegible] realized that what she had [illegible] was indeed the stark truth. [illegible] and a sense of unutterable [illegible] every cranny of his being.

She turned and faced [illegible] sunken eyes—those eyes [illegible] her one beautiful feature—[illegible] of agony and despair.

"I had absolutely counted [illegible] publisher's check. I had nothing [illegible] coming in, tho, of course, I [illegible] there would come a day [illegible] should be able to again earn [illegible] but that day could only come [illegible] my brother was dead. I [illegible] must happen if Charles [illegible] alive when I came to the end [illegible] three to four thousand francs [illegible] left."

Again she stopped for a [illegible] ments. "When you brought [illegible] expensive fruit I used to think [illegible] I only had the money this [illegible] stranger is spending on these [illegible] and grapes it would mean [illegible] week or two of life for [illegible] brother and myself. I [illegible] Charles would go on living [illegible] months and months, and so I [illegible] to plan. You know what it was [illegible] I planned!"

Kesterton forced himself [illegible] "Yes."

"But I could not think of [illegible] that would be—that must be [illegible] less. I would have died any [illegible] myself to save him pain. Then [illegible] made me send for Dr. Jacques [illegible] at last I saw my way clear. Do [illegible] remember how he warned me [illegible] careful over that strong narcotic [illegible] prescribed? He said it was dangerous stuff and that an overdose [illegible] mean death."

From the man sitting [illegible] there came a stifled groan.

"Forgive me for forcing you [illegible] ten to this confession, and yet [illegible] I have allowed you to go on [illegible] ing me as—as I know you did?"

Saved for Happiness by a Miracle

He remained silent and she [illegible] on. "At last there came the [illegible] when I knew there could be no [illegible] ther delay. Yet I hoped for a [illegible] acle even then, and I gave you [illegible] hundred francs to risk for me at [illegible] lette. But I seemed to know [illegible] night that money had been lost [illegible] I counted over what I had left.

"There was just enough to [illegible] everything. Everything. You [illegible] stand?" And as he bent his [illegible] she whispered: "I hoped you [illegible] suppose we had both taken an [illegible] dose of that dangerous narcotic. [illegible] felt sure Dr. Jacques would say [illegible] for he is so kind, and every [illegible] knows so much. And then——"

"And then?" repeated Kesterton mechanically.

"And then," she said faltering[illegible] "what I can only describe as a [illegible] miracle did happen."

He muttered, "A miracle! [illegible] do you mean?"

"When we first came to the [illegible] Azur, Charles began to get [illegible] That made me feel so happy, [illegible] started painting again. I did [illegible] small pictures of old Monaco, [illegible] took them to a frame maker in [illegible] Rue Longue.

"The man was encouraging. [illegible] said that people from Monte Carlo often come here and spend [illegible] freely, and he thought that any foreigner who liked my little pictures would willingly pay 200 francs apiece for them. But he was wrong—not [illegible] single person even inquired the [illegible] price. Then came the miracle! On the very morning I thought would [illegible] our last on earth, the pictures were sold, and that afternoon I got a thousand francs."

She was staring once more [illegible] over the dark sea. Kesterton twice tried to speak, but no words would come—it was as if his mouth were parched, and his throat closed.

She rose suddenly from the stone bench, and when he got up, too, they faced one another.

"And now we will say good-by. [illegible] have arranged to stay on for awhile in the lower town, for I have [illegible] chance there of a post as drawing mistress at a children's school."

He took her hand, and found that his power of speech had come back, for he heard himself saying, "[illegible] must never say good-by, Norah. [illegible] can't you understand, my dear? [illegible] love you so—with all my heart, [illegible] with everything that is me."

They followed the path where she had asked him to risk for her a hundred francs at the gambling tables.

Beethoven 9th Symphony on Program

By Edward Barry

FOR the first time since 1929, Chicago Symphony orchestra subscribers will hear this week complete performances of Beethoven's monumental Ninth symphony. On Thursday night and Friday afternoon the stage of Orchestra hall will groan under the weight of four soloists and a chorus of 250, besides the orchestra itself and Conductor Frederick Stock.

The chorus to be used this week is the dewy-voiced outfit which appeared in the same work in Evanston last spring. Altho acoustical difficulties on that occasion made the performance somewhat less exciting than confirmed thrill seekers could desire, there is no doubt but that the chorus will be able in these Orchestra hall presentations to give a tremendous eloquence to those exalted lines of Schiller's with which the symphony ends.

The soloists, who also will be dealing with Mr. Schiller, are Agnes Davis, Lilian Knowles, Joseph Victor Laderoute, and Mark Love—soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass, respectively. All of these except Mr. Laderoute are more or less familiar figures here. He is a Canadian tenor who has not sung in Chicago before unless one counts appearances years ago as a boy soprano.

The Ninth symphony is the largest in scale and the most profound in content of all Beethoven's works in this form. The piece takes more than an hour to perform, it utilizes chorus and soloists as well as a large orchestra, and it plumbs depths which had only been hinted at in the composer's earlier music.

Beethoven was working on his Ninth symphony in his late forties and early fifties. His life up to that point had provided him with the wide human experience which an artist uses unconsciously to give his work the stamp of knowledge and universality.

There had been numberless delights which most tabloid biographers of Beethoven pass over in almost total silence—doubtless in order to avoid spoiling the melancholy picture of the composer which it is their pleasure to draw. The joy of finding in himself the creative fire which many men would surrender wealth and honor to possess cannot be dismissed

Places Porter Music Ahead of Herbert's

By Cecil Smith

IF YOU thumb thru any standard musical encyclopedia you will find the names of Victor Herbert and Reginald De Koven, but you will not find the name of Cole Porter. To be sure, Herbert wrote "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," "Kiss Me Again," and dozens of other favorite tunes, and De Koven wrote the ubiquitous "O, Promise Me" (which is NOT, if you are one of those who ask the question, a deliberate steal from Sibelius' "Finlandia"). They also wrote other musical works of deadly seriousness—stillborn grand operas like Herbert's "Natoma" and De Koven's "The Canterbury Pilgrims"—but the composition of unsuccessful works of serious intent is hardly adequate warrant for space in an encyclopedia. It is as popular composers that Herbert and De Koven are remembered, and they probably would not be listed in reference books if they had not written any light music.

Here is injustice indeed. Cole Porter in his own vein, like Richard Rodgers and Jerome Kern in theirs, has been writing musical comedy music of high craftsmanship for a good many years. But the encyclopedias will have none of them, preferring to reserve their stamp of approval for the pretty but platitudinous output of Herbert and De Koven.

I should like to try to balance the scales of justice a bit in Mr. Porter's favor this morning, for we have with us for one more week at the Auditorium theater a cannily composed musical comedy called "Leave It to Me," and I am afraid it may get out of town with Victor Moore's inimitable comic talent still obscuring full appreciation of Mr. Porter's excellent skill.

Victor Herbert may have written "Sweethearts" and "Kiss Me Again," but Cole Porter has written "Night and Day" and "You're the Top" and "Begin the Beguine" and "Miss Otis Regrets" and "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" and "All Thru the Night" and "It's D'Lovely" and a raft of other scintillating songs. What is more, he is an ambidextrous fellow who writes his own words and then composes his own music so that it goes perfectly with his lyrics. Since in 1939 it is not only smart to be modern but also unavoidable, I submit that the sparkling

Puts Porter's Music Ahead of Herbert's

sparkling répertoire of Cole Porter has more present artistic value than any continuation of the sentimental Victor Herbert-Reginald de Koven tradition.

Mr. Porter is a native of Peru, Ind., who at some time between his birth in 1892 and his first musical show ["See America First"] in 1916 picked up a dependable musical and literary technique and a whale of a lot of sophisticated humor. His song lyrics may not, perhaps, deserve to be classed as literature, but they reveal underlying good literary taste in their avoidance of the obvious. He is an extraordinarily resourceful rhymester, able to think up "fine finnan haddie" as a rhyme for "daddy" or "Napoleon brandy" for "Mahatma Gandhi," and able to work these into a verse scheme of considerable subtlety of form.

The Porter vocabulary is a unique compound of slang and cultured literacy, as the verse to "You're the Top" will suggest:

"At words poetic I'm so pathetic that
I always have found it best,
Instead of getting 'em off my chest,
to let 'em rest unexpressed.
I hate parading my serenading, as
I'll probably miss a bar,
But if this ditty is not so pretty,
at least it'll tell you how great you are."

Or this one, from the current "Leave It to Me":

"From now on, no more philandering,
No more hot-spots, no scatterbrain.
From now on my fun will be meandering
With my darling down lovers' lane."

Cole Porter's music is a similar compound of popular and recherché elements. He loves to use surprise harmonies, as in "Night and Day," or to get the major and minor modes mixed up, as in "My Heart Belongs to Daddy." Also his rhythms are often sly and hard to catch on to the first time. But he never completely loses touch with the demands of Broadway or the taste of the popular mind. "Begin the Beguine," one of the best Porter pieces, took nearly four years to become really popular [it was written for "Jubilee" in 1935], but when it finally caught on it demonstrated unusual staying power, for it has something to listen to the twenty-fifth time as well as the first.

While the score of "Leave It to Me" is all expertly competent theater music, there are four songs of particular musical merit—"My Heart Belongs to Daddy," "From Now On," "I Want to Go Home" and "Most Gentlemen Don't Like Love." In the aggregate these songs constitute a feather in the cap of the contemporary lyric stage.

The extraordinary, mysterious mood of "Outward Bound" lingers in memory long after the curtain has fallen at the Harris theater. It is not often that a piece with such subtle overtones of fanciful imagination can boast a cast fully able to project its essence. The melting simplicity of Laurette Taylor as Mrs. Midget, the humble charwoman, and the calculating, hard surfaced sophistication of Florence Reed present virtues of characterization that are immediately apparent.

Some of the other individual performances attain their full stature only in retrospect. Notable among these is the feeling of compassionate resignation with which Morgan Farley invests the part of the steward who has made the round trip between earth and hell some five thousand times. Some hours after the drama was all over, the fact really dawned on me that his playing is actually a complete match for that of the stars, and that he succeeds amazingly in casting about the other players the unearthly spell in which they move and talk. When an actor is so good that you don't immediately realize how good he is, he has reached the top of his profession.

Morgan Farley.

"The Hot Mikado" has gone on tour and will follow the Ballet Russe into the Auditorium theater Sunday evening, Jan. 7. This is the production gotten together last year in New York by Michael Todd in competition with "The Swing Mikado," which the Federal Theater project transplanted from the Great Northern theater here to the New Yorker in New York. A more elaborate production than its one time competitor, "The Hot Mikado" rejoices in the presence of Bill Robinson, tap dancing mayor of Harlem. I assure you he makes the Mikado into a figure you never imagined in your wildest dreams.

It is now all set that Clifton Webb will take over the main rôle in "The Man Who Came to Dinner" when the midwestern company of the Kaufman-Hart hit comedy comes to the Harris theater Christmas night. His part is based on the life and idiosyncracies of Alexander Woollcott, lecturer, raconteur, radio star, and one time dramatic critic. When "The Man Who Came to Dinner" reaches Chicago, the company will be half a week old, for it opens in Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 21. In the meantime the original New York company is already selling seats months ahead, and all the dollar seats in the Music Box theater have been reserved up to March 12.

"Abe Lincoln in Illinois," with Raymond Massey as Abe, is wending its weary way slowly toward this center of midland culture. Its opening is now definitely settled for Jan. 8 at the Grand Opera house, and there will be no further change in plans.

"Springtime for Henry" offers a neat example of the pruning process necessary to a fast moving comedy. Edward Everett Horton's enraged outburst upon the stage of the Erlanger theater shortly after the ascent of the first curtain now takes only a hundred words or so. As Benn Levy wrote the original version, in which Henry [Horton] is telephoning for a new secretary to replace the one who has just left, there were many wasted lines, which we fortunately do not have to hear—such as "Lash all the furies together and multiply them by ten and they'd be as cooing doves compared to me," or "I've lost my girl, the one you gave me; you know, the pink and yellow one, done up in blue as a rule." With such lines as these, the comedy would have seemed labored and self-conscious. Without them, it was able, under Mr. Horton's treatment, to develop rapid pace and high spirits.

The scales of justice found "A Night at the Moulin Rouge" a short weight product. It closed at the Grand Opera house last night. Who says we are a gullible public?

This afternoon at 3 the Jack and Jill players will present their last performance of "The Pirates of Penzance" at the Civic theater. The cast of juvenile players is directed by Marie Agnes Foley.

The Goodman Memorial theater opens a two week stand of "Family Portrait" tomorrow evening. This drama, by William Cowen and Lenore Coffee, was an outstanding success in New York last year, with Judith Anderson in the rôle of Mary, the mother of Jesus. The incidents of the play take place within Jesus' own household, altho the character of Jesus does not appear on the stage. The present performance is given by the student players of the Goodman Theater School of Acting.

Clifford Odets' "Awake and Sing" will be given tonight at Anshe Emet auditorium, Broadway and Grace street, by the Anshe Emet players' group, under the direction of Beulah Margolis.

NEXT DOOR TO DADDY

Next door to where her father, John, is playing, Diana Barrymore is making her first Chicago stage appearance at the Harris theater in the revival of Sutton Vance's timeless "Outward Bound."

Vaudeville

For a second week the Chicago theater is holding over its film, "Drums Along the Mohawk," and two acts of the stage show—Cass Daley, comedienne, and the Three Samuels and Harriet Hayes, dance quartet. Newcomers to the revue include the Four Whitsons, acrobats, and the comedy team of Wall Brown and Annette Ames.

Jackie Heller, popular radio singer, and an N. T. G. revue are the featured events in the stage show at the Oriental theater. Nils T. Granlund brings with him this time a galaxy of stars — Sylvia McKay, Geraldine Barrett, Andree Andrea, Joan Gaylord, Chiquita, Sonia Katlarskaya, Kenneth Clark and Jane Reynolds, and the trio of Eddie, Jack, and Betty. Harry Savoy, comedian, is also present, as are Verne Buck and his orchestra, the Dancing Sweethearts, and Charles Kimball. On the screen Myrna Loy, Tyrone Power, and George Brent are starred in "The Rains Came."

The "Dead End Kids" bring their capers to the State-Lake theater this week. They number among themselves the bearers of such colorful nicknames as "Spit," "Milty," "Dippy," and "T. B." Other entertainers on the bill are Sam "Schlepperman" Hearn, Tom O'Neal, Marilyn Thorne, the Victoria Troupe, Don and Betty Lane, and Dare and Yates. "Fast and Furious," with Franchot Tone and Ann Sothern, is the current movie.

Continuing to delight audiences at the Rialto theater are June St. Clair, Marion Morgan, Charles Country, Kenny Brenna, Buster Lorenzo, Conchita, and Collette. The new film is "One Hour to Live," with Charles Bickford, Doris Nolan, and John Litel.

Recordings

Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" ["A Hero's Life"], recorded by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia orchestra, is the Victor feature album for December. Never has the hero seemed more heroic, the enemies more inimical, nor the loved one more lovable, than in the intense performance given the tone poem in this new pressing.

Mr. Ormandy's knack of making things dramatic and forceful is employed so brilliantly that the occasional dull spots often considered inevitable in works of such length simply do not exist here. The hero and everything that he experiences seem just as important now as they did 41 years ago, when the work was new and considered revolutionary.

There is a suspicion, by the way, that "A Hero's Life" was intended by Strauss as a picture of his own career. The various episodes [which are described in a booklet which accompanies the album] fit the composer's life well enough, altho he has never admitted that he had any autobiographical purpose in the work.

'The World We Make' Is Likely to Linger Awhile

By Burns Mantle.

New York [Special].—We drew only one quasi success out of four new plays this last week, which is not as good an average as we have been accustomed to this season. Sidney Kingsley's "The World We Make" is likely to linger for a time, but I wouldn't give a nickel for the chances of Gladys Hurlbut's "Ring Two," Caroline North's and Earl Blackwell's "Aries Is Rising," and Justin Sturm's "I Know What I Like."

Kingsley, at least, has a holding story. He took it from a novel by Millen Brand called "The Outward Room." It is the story of a harassed girl driven to the border line of insanity by quarreling and cruel parents, and it is most realistically staged.

Kingsley is a disciple of the David Belasco school of play producers. He believes in making things as real as possible on the stage. You may remember the operating room scene in his "The Men in White" and the dead end wharf which was the background of the play "Dead End." He also had a huge munitions factory built for a piece he wrote called "Ten Million Ghosts," but it never got out of New York, nor played in New York very long.

A good many experienced playgoers object to this expression of physical realism in the theater. Usually, they say, it is devised to hide a weak story. Belasco went to his grave with the taunts of his critics ringing in his ears, but no other producer of his time had a record of more successful plays accepted by run-of-the-house playgoers.

Kingsley's first bit of realism is the office of a psychiatrist, who is at the head of a sanitarium to which Virginia McKay has been committed. All the partitions are semitransparent and there are strong lights behind them, so the figures of nurses and attendants passing thru the halls are thrown as shadows on a screen. In the office Dr. Schiller tells Virginia that she is practically well, that she can leave the sanitarium, and that her future life can be what she makes it.

Virginia accepts the physician's reasoning with reservations. She is apprehensive. She is not sure she can again live with her parents, who hate each other and, she feels, hate her.

Virginia is alone in the office when her parents come for her. Before they can take her they have fallen again to quarreling. Then Virginia knows. The moment they have left the room she steals the outer door keys from the doctor's desk. You see her making her way stealthily along the halls and escaping from the sanitarium.

Now the scene changes. The lights are up on a steam laundry in full operation. Quantities of very dirty linen are being put thru steam tubs, driers, and mangles. A dozen laundry workers, several recruited, the story is, from a real laundry, go professionally about their jobs. Even the theater seems to be getting hotter from the steam rising from the stage plant.

Virginia arrives looking for a job. She is shoved about a bit roughly before she reaches the foreman. She gets the job, but, being frail and long without food, she is likely to faint at it. The foreman favors her in hopes of a date. A more noble steam tub fellow would offer her rough protection. With this one she goes to his tenement room for the night. Being noble he sleeps on the floor and gives her his bed.

The tenement is realistic, too. Narrow halls and stairways, stuffy rooms, and plenty of grime. Waking from her protected sleep, finding herself late for work, Virginia starts to clean up. The situation is old enough and common enough. Its realistic background adds something to it. You can believe that both the tenement and its inhabitants, a simple, poverty ridden, kindly people do exist.

Thereafter such dramatic values as "The World We Make" develops come from Virginia's recovery thru work and thru living normally with normal people. She falls in love with her laundry worker and lives happily with him. But she will not marry him because of her fear that the taint of insanity is in her blood. She sends for the sanitarium doctor to come and get her. At the crisis she learns that her lover stands desperately in need of her to help him over a tragedy in his own family. Then she knows she has found her work and her health.

Mr. Kingsley both produced and staged "The World We Make." The cast is of his selection and carefully typed. Margo, of Mexican parentage, who began as a dancer on the coast, plays Virginia and reveals herself a dramatic actress of a good deal of force, as she did once before in Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset." Herbert Rudley, a local boy who has made good, is the nobler laundry worker. There are a dozen foreign character bits well played.

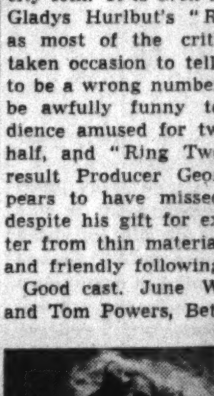
Of course life in the country is always a little funny. Especially to city folk. It is even a little funny in Gladys Hurlbut's "Ring Two," tho, as most of the critical lads have taken occasion to tell her this seems to be a wrong number. But it has to be awfully funny to keep an audience amused for two hours and a half, and "Ring Two" isn't. As a result Producer George Abbott appears to have missed "Ring Two" despite his gift for extracting laughter from thin material and his large and friendly following.

Good cast. June Walker is in it, and Tom Powers, Betty Field, Edith Van Cleve, and Paul McGrath. June is an ex-actress who has been divorced by McGrath because of his jealousy of her leading man, Mr. Powers. June has gone to the country and bought a little place in which to retire from the world and everything. But she does have a lot of company and a lot of servants, mostly comic. Mr. McGrath, ex-husband, is there with a young daughter by a former marriage. Mr. Powers is there with a chorus girl.



Betty Field.

Naturally there is a good deal of confusion, even before the lights go out and a blizzard appears. But, as I say, it is just theater stuff and not very funny. The laughs come from the lines and not the situations. Line laughter fades pretty quickly.

Westport, Conn., had its day in the theater with the production of Justin Sturm's comedy, "I Know What I Like." Mr. Sturm, who played football for Yale in his college days, is a favorite adopted son of Connecticut. Forced out of heavy work because of an athlete's heart, he turned to art. He is a very good amateur sculptor and has written a novel or two and a raft of short stories. Naturally, and probably at the urging of his friends, he tried a play. "I Know What I Like" is the result.

Not too bad for a first comedy, but fearfully trite and theatrical for this competitive market. Gifted young artist meets rich girl; loves her; copies an El Greco to get money to court her. Rich girl is engaged to a snobbish banker and terribly unhappy. Banker and rich girl quarrel, artist explains copy of El Greco, and everything is hotsy totsy by 11 p. m.

Helen Claire, last season's honey chile in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," and John Beal, one of the more likable juveniles of Broadway and Hollywood, have the leads and do very well with them, but I'm afraid they won't be working long.

A little something called "Aries Is Rising" sneaked in one night last week. When the house lights were turned on who should walk out on the stage but Constance Collier! Also Blanche Sweet. And several others of honorable service and some experience in the theater. I suppose these is exlanation why these players let themselves be hired for this particularly inept play, but none has so far been offered. I hope they got their two weeks' guarantee. "Aries Is Rising" fumbled the story of a southern girl who came to New York for a screen test. She was sent to Hollywood and tossed out of the first studio she tried to get a job in. It was her young and pretty mother who got the job.

Show Business Will Send Big Names to City

Chicago's night life date book is fast being filled with some of the biggest names in show business.

The Drake hotel, with a fond adieu to popular Wayne King, has already welcomed Buddy Rogers and his 19 piece band. The Hotel Sherman has followed Gene Krupa with another comeback artist, Fats Waller. The Palmer House, setting attendance records in its Empire room second only to those established by Veloz and Yolanda, will hold Tommy Dorsey over the holiday season, bringing Orrin Tucker back Jan. 4.

The Colony club continues its name parade with Hildegarde, the amusing young singer who opens Dec. 11, along with Galli Galli, Hindu magician. Xavier Cugat's famous orchestra will arrive Jan. 12. Estelle and Le Roy, dance team, are currently sharing the show time with Sophie Tucker.

The Pump room [Ambassador Hotel East], holding over John Kirby's band, joins the Buttery [Ambassador West] in bringing back Maggi McNellis, the Chicago beauty who has just completed a singing engagement in New York's Monte Carlo café.

Chez Paree, retaining Joe E. Lewis, Tamara, and Paul Haakon until the Christmas show, Dec. 22, brings in Lou Breese Dec. 7.

The annual preholiday reopening of the Congress hotel Casino room will bring Ted Fio-Rito's band and an as yet unselected floor show into the avenue room Dec. 21.

Out north at the Edgewater Beach, Paul Gerrits, roller skating emcee, is headlining the current show that augments Ray Herbeck's comeback to the Marine dining room. Ted Weems comes in on Dec. 23.

For the 12th time Joe Sanders has opened an engagement at the Blackhawk restaurant and the reception accorded the "ole left-hander" was reminiscent of the vociferous days when Coon-Sanders' Nighthawks came up to Chicago from their radio aerie in Kansas City. That was 13 years ago, and in today's band there are, in addition to Sanders, three men who played that first Chicago engagement—Rex Downing, trombone, Harold Thiell, saxophone, and Eddie Edwards, tuba.

The Sanders music retains the sprightly thump that made it a byword on the airlanes during the crystal set days, yet is perfectly up to date. Entertainment is ample, too.

Sis and Bud Roberts have a fresh slant on comedy dancing, June Brooks offers several gay ballet routines, and Johnny Duffy furnishes the interim music on a portable organ.

Phil Levant, now playing at the Trianon ballroom, will co-star with Clyde Lucas, current maestro of the north side Aragon, on Thursday for the annual Trianon attachés' ball. The Three Graces, W-G-N singing team, will head the special show.

Opera Reverts to More Diversified Schedule This Week

Wagner Gives Way to Italian, French Works

By Cecil Smith.

Kirsten Flagstad has gone back to New York now, and last week's concentrated outburst of Wagnerian music over at the Civic Opera house is a thing of the past. In the next eight days, therefore, the Chicago City Opera company will revert to a more diversified schedule, with the emphasis upon Italian and French works, and with a special performance in Polish of Moniuszko's "Halka" thrown in for good measure. Aside from the operatic bills, there will be a gala concert tonight for the benefit of the opera company. Elen Dosia will make her first appearance of the season at this concert, and arias and songs will also be contributed by Dusolina Giannini, André Burdino, Jan Kiepura, and Giovanni Martinelli.

Miss Dosia's return to the local field is good news indeed. The petite and gracious Greek-born singer of French lyric soprano rôles has made a distinctive place for herself in her two previous Chicago seasons. The rôles allotted to her this week are two of her best—the title part of Massenet's "Manon" on Wednesday night and the heroine of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" on Saturday night.

The performance of "Romeo and Juliet," the only one scheduled this season, commemorates a historic event. Exactly fifty years earlier, on Dec. 9, 1889, the new Auditorium theater was opened with a concert at which Adelina Patti sang. The following evening, Dec. 10, 1889, "Romeo and Juliet" was staged, with Sig. Ravelli and Patti in the title rôles. Nearly 40 years later, on Jan. 26, 1929, the Chicago Civic Opera company gave its last performance in the old house. With due sentimentality "Romeo and Juliet" was again chosen, with a notable cast including Charles Hackett, Edith Mason, Irene Pavloska, Maria Claessens, José Mojica, Cesare Formichi, Desire Defrere and Edouard Cotreuil, and with Giorgio Polacco conducting.

Saturday evening's anniversary performance of "Romeo and Juliet" brings forward a new American tenor, Ernest McChesney, in his major operatic debut. During the past summer he studied the part of Romeo in Paris with Lucien Muratore, the great French romantic tenor of twenty years ago.

Dusolina Giannini, whose volatile temperament insures that no assignment she undertakes ever will be dull, sings the title rôle of Puccini's "Tosca" here for the first time at Thursday evening's popular priced board of education performance. This will be the only "Tosca" of the season.

A surprising, but none the less welcome, addition to the company is Elisabeth Rethberg, who comes to sing Leonora in "Il Trovatore" on Saturday afternoon. Altho she sang the rôle summer after summer at Ravinia, she has done so only once downtown—in the 1937 season.

Another unexpected last minute engagement is that of James Melton, who will sing Pinkerton opposite Hilda Burke's Cho-Cho-San in Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" Monday evening. Mr. Melton, long a popular radio artist, made his Chicago operatic debut in this same part last season.

Moniuszko's "Halka," a national classic of Poland, will be offered next Sunday evening for the primary benefit of Chicago's large Polish audience. There is nothing esoteric about either the story or the music of "Halka," however, and those unfamiliar with the Polish language in which it is sung will not find it a bit baffling. One of the principal charms of the opera lies in its opportunity for a display of bright Polish dancing in the mazurs and other dances which dot the score.

Renee Treer, a soprano of Polish birth, will make her debut in the name part of "Halka." She has sung extensively in Germany and other European countries, but, like so many other artists, has now preferred to come to America until times improve over there. Her associates in the cast will be Valerie Glowacka, who sang in "Halka" last year; Jan Kiepura, George Czaplicki, and Mark Love [whose knowledge of Polish is one of his most astounding accomplishments].

The Civic Opera house will be a busy place next Sunday, for the presentation of "Halka" will be preceded in the afternoon by the last of the Littlefield ballet programs. Last Sunday the Littlefields suffered a serious disappointment when they were forced to cancel "Daphnis and Chloë" [and with it their whole concert] because no orchestra could be obtained capable of playing smoothly the exceptionally difficult Ravel score.

No such obstacle stands in the way of next Sunday's program, however, and there is every reason to feel sure that it will be given as announced. Of the three ballets listed, "Snow Queen," danced to a score by Murray Cutter, is new. Its companion pieces will be "Viennese Waltz" [Johann Strauss] and "Aurora's Wedding" [Tschaikowsky]. All the choreography is by Catherine Littlefield.

At a special performance sponsored by the Park Ridge School for Girls, Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" will be offered for the third time this season. Giovanni Martinelli will be the Canio in "Pagliacci," with Robert Weede as Tonio and Vivian Della Chiesa and Anthony Marlowe in the other rôles. In "Cavalleria Rusticana" the principals will be Elsa Soderstam, Margery Mayer, May Barron, Armand Tokatyan, and Mr. Weede.

The week's detailed program follows:

Tonight at 8—Gala benefit concert, with Elen Dosia, Dusolina Giannini, Andre Burdino, Jan Kiepura, and Giovanni Martinelli.

Monday at 8—Puccini's "Madame Butterfly," with Hilda Burke, Ada Paggi, Helen Ryerson, James Melton, Giuseppe Cavadore, Anthony Marlowe, George Czaplicki, John Daggett Howell, and Douglas Beattie; Henry Weber, conductor.

Wednesday at 8—Massenet's "Manon," with Elen Dosia, Louisa Hoe, Josephine Swinney, Elizabeth Brown, Lillian Padorr, Jan Kiepura, Giuseppe Cavadore, George Czaplicki, Reinhold Schmidt, John Macdonald, and Douglas Beattie; Louis Hasselmans, conductor.

Friday at 8—Verdi's "Rigoletto," with Hilde Reggiani, Margery Mayer, Josephine Swinney, Harriet Brewer, Monna Van, Jan Kiepura, Giuseppe Cavadore, Robert Weede, John Daggett Howell, Edward Stack, Virgilio Lazzari, and Douglas Beattie; Leo Kopp, conductor.

Saturday at 2—Verdi's "Il Trovatore," with Elizabeth Rethberg, Elen Longone, Harriet Brewer, Giovanni Martinelli, Carlo Morelli, Virgilio Lazzari, Giuseppe Cavadore, and Edward Stack; Henry Weber, conductor.

Saturday at 8—Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," with Elen Dosia, Margery Mayer, Ada Paggi, Ernest McChesney [début], Giuseppe Cavadore, John Macdonald, John Daggett Howell, Mark Love, and Douglas Beattie; Littlefield ballet; Louis Hasselmans, conductor.

THREE APPEARANCES THIS WEEK

Three appearances will be made at the Civic Opera house this week by the French soprano, Elen Dosia. Besides participating in tonight's benefit concert she will sing in "Manon" on Wednesday and "Romeo and Juliet" on Saturday night.

Symphony Will Play Complete Beethoven 9th

as something trivial. Even on the purely worldly side, had he not risen from the position of a poor, uneducated, awkward provincial to that of the first musician in the world? Those who believe that all composers had to wait until after death to receive even a fraction of the honor due them are always astounded to learn that Beethoven was treated with immense deference in his lifetime and that his fame had spread far beyond the boundaries of his native Germany and his adopted Austria.

But the gloomy picture painted by the tabloid biographers is not all false by any means. Beethoven suffered fearfully from loneliness and unsatisfied longing for a rich social and family life, and from the affliction of deafness which shut him out from full participation in the very art which was his life and his work.

In the Ninth, his last symphony, Beethoven was in a position to express musically much that he had come to know and feel about the world and human existence. He had mellowed to a state far removed from that which had produced the passionate, almost naïve Fifth symphony. The Ninth symphony, like the Fifth—like nearly all his major works, in fact—is affirmative rather negative, optimistic rather than pessimistic, but the affirmation and the optimism are those of a man who has won his final tranquility the hard way—by means of the ripening which exhaustive experience brings.

But talking about the music's content is unnecessary when we can let the music itself, with all its power and directness and precision, do the talking for us. There is another topic which is a more legitimate subject for this column. That is the contrast between certain aspects of Beethoven's character on the one hand and an important aspect of his music on the other.

Beethoven was a man whom any modern psychiatrist would give his eye teeth to get hold of. He was simply incapable of achieving that clarity of mind necessary to run his life efficiently and happily. To the end of his life he was making the same mistakes and muddling along in the same confused, unhappy way. His maladjustments included inability to keep friends, inability to see himself as a responsible part of a great social organism, inability to make any wise provision for his own comfort or security. All of this would lead one to believe that Beethoven's mind was muddled and, to say the least, inefficient.

Yet—and herein lies the paradox—his music betrays a clarity, a logic, a sense of fitness that have been the wonder of students for more than a century. Here was a split personality—in the colloquial sense of the term, anyway. Beethoven's muddle headedness might lose him his thousandth bout with the world, yet he could turn immediately to his work and proceed upon it with tremendous intelligence. There is no better example of this than the Ninth symphony, which for all its soundness and clarity was written during some of its composer's stormiest years.

The Ninth symphony, by the way, is merely the last of the symphonies and not the last of Beethoven's works. It was finished in 1823, when the composer still had four years of life before him. He occupied himself mostly with chamber music thereafter.

Besides the Ninth symphony, this week's Thursday-Friday programs promise two of the overtures which Beethoven wrote for his single opera, "Fidelio," as well as the quartet, "Mir it's so wunderbra," from the same work. The overtures are the ones known as the "Fidelio," and the "Leonore, No. 3." The quartet is to be sung by the same soloists who are to participate in the Ninth symphony.

Saroyan Ballet.

The new ballet which William Saroyan has written for the Ballet theater will be known as "An Episode in the Life of a Great American Goof." Henry Brant will supply the music, Augustus Tack the setting, and Eugene Loring the choreography for the piece. Nana Gollner will dance the leading feminine rôle.

Current Music News

The Illinois Symphony orchestra will resume its activities in Chicago tomorrow night, opening its fourth season with a concert devoted to two symphonies, Brahms' Fourth and Shostakovich's First. Izler Solomon, whose reputation is now nation-wide, will conduct.

Changes have been made with regard to the ensemble and its series. No longer will the concerts be played in the Great Northern theater; henceforth they will be in the Blackstone theater. The time has been shifted from Sunday afternoon to Monday night in the hope that fewer conflicting musical events will make attendance more convenient. Herman Clebanoff has replaced Fritz Siegal as concert master of the orchestra, the latter having assumed that post with the Seattle Symphony. The important element of low ticket prices still prevails, however, remaining 15c, 35c, and 55c.

Jascha Heifetz will make his only appearance in Chicago this season when he plays this afternoon in the Auditorium theater on Northwestern university's History and Enjoyment of Music Series. The violinist needs no introduction to the general public, much less the musical one, and no doubt his recent excursion into motion pictures — he is featured in "They Shall Have Music" — has spread his fame further. Heifetz will bring his interesting program to a close today with the first Chicago performance of his transcription of Cyril Scott's Fantasie Orientale. Emanuel Bay, as usual, will be the excellent accompanist. The full program follows:

"The Lark"	Castelnuovo-Tedesco
Sonata No. 1, D Major	Beethoven
Concerto, E Minor	Conus
Sonata	Pierné
Melodie	Tschaikowsky
Valse	Godowsky
Fantasie Orientale	Scott

[First performance in Chicago.]

Gamma chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota is presenting Virginia Auyer, contralto, and Edward Eigenschenk, organist, two familiar Chicago musicians, in a joint recital in Kimball hall on Tuesday night. The former, accompanied by Edgar Nelson, will sing one group of French and German songs and one of English. Hindemith's Second Sonata for organ is a welcome item on Mr. Eigenschenk's portion of the program; the other pieces he will perform being from the works of Bach, Vierne, and Hokanson.

From Tuesday thru Saturday the modern dance group at Northwestern university, Orchesis, will present a program in the University theater to commemorate its 15th anniversary. This honorary club for girls showing unusual dancing and creative ability, such as Pearl Urbanek, was founded in 1924 by Margaret Schultz Krantz, its director until 1932, when the present director, Agnes Jones, took charge. Thru its many recitals and its participation in North Shore theatrical events it has created and encouraged interest in contemporary dancing. The anniversary program will include several new works, among them a choreographic version of Ernest Bloch's Concerto Grosso. Miss Jones also will be seen for the first time in Orchesis' history as a soloist on one of their concerts. The starting time for performances this week will be 8:30 o'clock.

Annually, Christmas brings forth a host of informal, public choral programs of seasonal music. One such is the concert to be given by the Glee club of the Art Institute of Chicago. At 4:15 o'clock on Wednesday and Thursday it will present several appropriate carols and anthems under the direction of Charles Fabens Kelley in Blackstone hall.

Georgia School Plan Reduces Overlapping

[Is your son fitted for a college education? Information which can help you choose the right course and the right school is given in the book, "Higher Education," by Dr. John Evans of the Tribune staff. On sale at Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street, and at Tribune Tower, 435 North Michigan avenue. Price, 10 cents. By postpaid mail, 13 cents.]

By the Rev. John Evans.

Robert M. Hutchins' recent plea for a correlation of college and university functions in areas where there is competition or overlapping by two or more institutions for higher education, finds its pioneer illustration of this coördination in the development of Atlanta Center, Ga., involving six institutions.

Raymond B. Fosdick, in his presidential report for the general board of education in the Rockefeller Foundation, states that the plan "is maturing with much definiteness." As a result of lengthy study and discussion, collaboration in curricula has been formally entered into by the executives of the following six institutions in the Atlanta area: Emory university, Agnes Scott college, the University of Georgia, the Georgia School of Technology, the High Museum of Art, and Columbia Theological seminary.

The chancellor of the University of Georgia participated in the deliberations and concurred in the conclusions as affecting the participation of public institutions, and during the last year the plans for closer coöperation between Agnes Scott and Emory have materially advanced.

In general, the agreements between these two institutions provide that Agnes Scott college shall remain an undergraduate liberal arts college for women, assuming the responsibility for developing majors in fine arts and home economics and for the upbuilding of certain other designated fields to serve the interests of both institutions.

Emory university is required to raise certain of its curricular standards, notably natural and social sciences; also assumes the same responsibility as Agnes Scott college in upbuilding those departments common to both, and will undertake to extend those departments which have been selected for higher graduate offerings. When it shall have accomplished all this, Emory university will discontinue the matriculation of undergraduate women, and will proceed to the development of certain professional schools.

The Atlanta Center plan conserves the identity and integrity of all six coöperating institutions, nor will any effort be made at any time to merge any of them. But to facilitate the objectives, provision has been made to set up an advisory board of trustees on the university center and an advisory faculty council.

"The coöperating institutions have given evidence not only of interest, but also of deep vision as to the potentially great gains to the southeast," Dr. Fosdick's report reads, "thru coördination of efforts, mutual agreements on fields of major emphasis in the several institutions, arrangements for faculty and student exchanges, and concerted endeavors to better the needs of the region. They have accepted the principle of proceeding on the basis of consultation in the light of recognized common interests and statutory or charter obligations."

Notes of Music and Musicians

Since he was residing in Switzerland at the outbreak of the new war and seemingly unable to get a visa to come to America, it seemed for a while that Rudolf Serkin would be unable to fulfill his recital engagements in the Musical Arts Piano series. Fortunately he was able to get away, but not without having to cancel his October and November dates in the east. On Tuesday he will play in Orchestra hall, making his fourth appearance in this city—he has given one recital and played twice with the Chicago Symphony orchestra.

Rudolf Serkin.

This number of appearances would seem too few when one considers his prestige in the musical world and his excellence as a performer of chamber music as well as solo numbers. As might have been expected the Russian-Czech pianist has chosen a program to stimulate one's interest. It will open with Bach's "Capriccio on the Departure of His Brother," the second movement of which is headed, "A representation of the various casualties that may happen to him in a foreign country." One of the lesser known Beethoven sonatas, opus 78 in F sharp major, and Reger's Variations and Fugue on a theme of J. S. Bach follow. Because of its difficulty and the extreme length of the fugue, the latter piece is a rarity on recital programs. Selections by Schubert, Mendelssohn, and Chopin will bring the concert to a close.

Catherine Saurer, a resident composer and pianist, will give a recital in Kimball hall this afternoon. Arnold Bax's Second Sonata in G, a worthy novelty, will be given its first Chicago performance on her program. Leo Sowerby, Miss Saurer's eminent colleague, is represented with two pieces from his Florida Suite, and the concert will be brought to a close with the performer's own Theme, Variations and Toccata. The complete listing follows:

"Papillons"	Schumann
Second Sonata in G	Bax
[First performance in Chicago]
Impromptu, F Sharp	Chopin
Scherzo, B Minor	Chopin
"Haidenröslein"	Schubert-Godowsky
"Au bord d'une source"	Liszt
Florida Suite: "Pines at Dusk," "Sun-Drenched Palms"	Sowerby
Theme, Variations and Toccata	Saurer

Arthur Poister, professor of organ at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, will be presented by the Chicago Club of Women Organists in recital in Kimball hall tomorrow night. A graduate of the American Conservatory of Music, he has studied abroad with Dr. Karl Straube, Gunther Ramin, and Marcel Dupré. He has participated in numerous Bach festivals, and in 1929 while teaching at the University of Redlands, presented the complete organ literature of the German composer in a series of 20 recitals. Tomorrow night's program opens with a Rameau suite, and includes Mozart's Andante in F major, two chorales and the Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor by Bach, and numbers by four twentieth century composers—Max Reger, Marcel Dupré, Percy Whitlock, and Leo Sowerby.

Several of his own compositions are listed on the piano recital which Harry Crismore will give in the Auditorium recital hall today. The program also includes Beethoven's Sonata, opus 27, No. 2, and short items by Chopin, Jensen, Rachmaninoff, and Liszt.

For the thirteenth time in as many years, the Marshall Field and Company Choral society, directed by Edgar Nelson, will give a forty-five minute abridged version of Handel's "Messiah" in the loop store on Tuesday morning. Soloists for the performance will be Edna Thompson, soprano; Robert Kessler, tenor, and John Macdonald, bass. Grace T. Fredenhagen and Harry T. Carlson will be the pianists, and Stanley Martin the organist.

At 8 o'clock this evening the Collegium Musicum of the University of Chicago will give a program of vocal and instrumental music of the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries in Joseph Bond chapel on the university campus. Under the direction of Siegmund Levarie two Symphoniae Sacrae by Heinrich Schuetz will be sung in a new English translation, the soloists being Barbara Russell, alto, and Denis Cowan and Harold Spencer, tenors. A motet by Jacobus Vaet and compositions by Rosenmiller, Marini, Handel, des Prés, and Hassler complete the program. Admission to the concert is free.

At the Rockefeller Memorial chapel the Metropolitan Church choir, J. Wesley Jones, director, will sing a program of Negro spirituals at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon.

Good Morning!

Take a few minutes off, will you, and see if there isn't a movie listed here that you'd like to see? You've no idea how a couple of hours at a picture show will relieve that pain in the neck known as "Christmas shopping tension." [Or have you?] I'll be brief.

"Forty Girls and a Baby"—"This gay, and, at times, touching comedy, hails from France. . . . The story is built on the 'Bachelor Mother' theme, only the baby in this case has 40 bachelor mothers and one bachelor father. . . ."

"The Real Glory"—"Somber but exciting cinema based on historical incidents which occurred during the days when a peaceful majority of the Philippine islands lived in a tumult of fear and superstition kept at boiling pitch by fierce inroads upon them by their enemies, the Moros who lived in the jungles. . . . Characterized by much suspense. . . ." Featured players Gary Cooper, Andrea Leeds, David Niven, and Reginald Owen.

"On Your Toes"—Displays earmarks of whimsical sort of genius. . . . Story, an odd sort of yarn. . . . Features Zorina, Eddie Albert, Alan Hale, Frank McHugh, and Leonid Kinsky.

"Mr. Smith Goes to Washington"—"Hot stuff. . . . Adroitly seasoned with the awful truth, it emerges sizzling from the oven of timeliness. . . . If ever there was an all-American movie, this is one. . . . Story told is a simple one but, like a French gown, it definitely has what it takes. . . ." Featured players James Stewart, Jean Arthur, Edward Arnold, Claude Rains.

"Honeymoon in Bali"—"Comedy—silken and sophisticated." With Fred MacMurray, Madeleine Carroll, Allan Jones, Akim Tamiroff.

"The Challenge"—"Fascinating picture filmed in the Alps . . . engrossing out of door action melodrama based on historical fact relative to the conquering of the Matterhorn in 1865 by the English climber, Edward Whymper . . . one of those productions I'd let you lure me to twice, with never an outcry." In the leads Luis Trenker and Robert Douglas.

"Rulers of the Sea"—"A braw, brave movie solidly underpinned by fact, but by no means scorning a fictional touch here and there by way of entertainment . . . the little old mammy of all the great trans-Atlantic steamers takes a bow." Features Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Margaret Lockwood, Will Fyffe.

"That's Right You're Wrong"—"Nice, wholesome, happy 'kid,' genially satirizing Hollywood and showing up Kay Kyser as a very good actor who, after all, doesn't really do any acting at all, because the story of 'That's Right You're Wrong' was wisely written so as to permit him to be just himself . . . an all around enjoyable picture."

"Those High Gray Walls"—"So different from the ordinary run of prison melodramas that I earnestly recommend it to your attention feeling sure that you'll thank me for doing so. . . . Principal characters, two doctors, are presented with extraordinary intelligence, insight, and sympathy. . . ." In the leading rôles, Onslow Stevens and Walter Connolly.

"Disputed Passage"—"Adapted from Lloyd Douglas' novel. Akim Tamiroff gives a truly great performance as Forster . . . John Howard can be proud with reason of his keenly intuitive portrayal of Dr. Beaven. . . . Competently staged, directed, and photographed. . . ."

See you tomorrow.

Hardwicke for Cohan.

Sidney Howard's posthumous play, "Madam, Will You Walk," has undergone an important change in casting. George M. Cohan played the leading rôle during the pre-Broadway tour, but tho the producers found no fault with his performance, the player decided the part was unsuitable for him, and he withdrew from the company. He will be replaced by no less a person than Sir Cedric Hardwicke. The play is once more in rehearsal, and now is expected to open in New York during the Christmas holidays.

Paris Gala Aids War Work

By May Birkhead

PARIS.—In this strange war, in which remarkable events may one day put an end to the inaction of the immense forces ranged against each other, the French behind the lines are waiting calmly. Among the upper ten any diversion that breaks the monotony is welcomed. One recent evening hundreds of representative Parisian figures attended the gala given at the opera in the presence of President and Mme. Albert Lebrun to benefit the automobile ambulance section of the French Red Cross. The music consisted of the second act of Gluck's "Alceste," of Albert de Roussel's "Festin de l'Araignée," and of Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloë," the latter with (Continued on Page 2.)

Miss Katharine Lawrence (upper left) and Miss Marilyn Martin (center), debutantes, are framed charmingly in daguerreotype style, altho Miss Lawrence's costume is not as much in keeping with that old-fashioned style as Miss Martin's. Miss Martin is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mellen C. Martin of Winnetka and Miss Lawrence is a daughter of Mrs. Samuel D. Rowe of Barrington and John Harold Lawrence of Winnetka. Miss Martin, who is studying in New York this winter, is pictured in the gown she wore at her debut reception and dance at the Indian Hill Country club. ● Miss Mary Hale (lower left) will need a large Christmas stocking, for the fetching blue and red ski outfit she is wearing is going to be a present from her mother, Mrs. William B. Hale. Miss Hale modeled the outfit in the Northwestern University Settlement fashion show. ● Mrs. Irving Herriott Jr. (upper right) was photographed at the marriage of her husband's sister, Miss Janet Herriott, and Nathan B. Swift. The ceremony was a quiet one in the Drake hotel apartment of the senior Mr. and Mrs. Herriott. ● Mrs. Arthur S. Johnson (right) is a member of the Evanston Junior league, which raises a large part of its annual contribution to charity by giving a Follies each winter. This year's successful edition was presented recently in the Glencoe school auditorium.

Miss Betty Coston (left), daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Coston, is one of the south side's pretty belles. This picture of her was taken at the recent gay Arden Shore benefit ball. ● Miss Caterina Bolognesi (above), elder daughter of Count and Countess Bolognesi, is active in Barat college alumnæ circles, for she was graduated from the college last June. Opera Is Hub of Social Life During Week

By Cousin Eve.

It was charming, that dinner on the vast stage of Chicago City Opera house Tuesday night. No matter how delightful our daily walk in life, one day is not unlike another day. One knows beforehand what one is going to eat, what people are going to say; that breast of chicken is sure to appear with, very likely, carrots and peas on the side. One knows the happy sameness, the lack of deviation from the normal.

So it was a grand frolic to go operawards for the aperitif up in the unique Electric club. The director of the opera, Henry Weber, and his wife, Marion Claire, lovely diva, were hosts to perhaps 10 persons. Marion, an exquisite blonde, wore an ideal, high cut toilette of orange chiffon that whirled and swirled, with a girdle of pale green and a tiara of green satin holding down her tresses. Others were Mr. and Mrs. Jason Whitney, Robert Hall McCormick, Mrs. Jacob Baur in black velvet, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Kirk, the latter in a vortex of black tulle.

The main cocktail party preceding the dinner was held on the small stage of the opera, and such a racket when that got going with 150 guests! It was exciting tearing along by the dressing rooms of the principals and hearing the roar of conviviality below. Everybody there was more or less a grand opera fan, and hoping to see it established on a firm basis in Chicago. And standing forth in the multitude were the singers of the opera themselves, exotic songbirds who are, one and all, very dear to us. And that is still another thrill, to see them in white ties and tail coats, the chic high evening frock. Women who came to this dinner were of two minds. Either they were arrayed en grand gala, like Mrs. Jason Whitney, whose costume was of azure lamé under an ermine coat, or they followed the doctrine of Miss Elizabeth McCormick, and came in theater dress.

We found the stage set for the third act of "Otello," with six long tables parallel, and one high table for the seats of the mighty. The organ was thundering the triumphal march from "Aïda," where Rhadames comes back in the chariot from his victories, and there were bright autumn flowers and a delectable three course dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Kirk, Mrs. Jacob Baur, Mrs. James McMillan, Mrs. Whitney, Abner Stilwell, and Robert Upham were at the top table.

Joseph Nate, drive director of the opera, made a vivid talk, so did Mr. Stillwell, and then we had an interlude of music. Virginia Haskins, who looks like a young thing about to make her debut, sang "Caro Nome," thereby increasing her vogue with operagoers. Carlo Morelli sang an aria from "Falstaff". Mme. Lushanaya, an Indian princess, gave two native songs. A piano stood at the footlights, and the singers faced the back of the stage, as Henry Weber wittily said, "in a great novelty, opera singers with their backs to the footlights."

THANKSGIVING DAY BRIDE

Mrs. Harold Ginsburg was Miss Edythe Jean Stein until Thanksgiving, Nov. 23. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Stein of Evanston. The bride attended De Paul university and her husband attended the University of Wisconsin and De Paul College of Law.

[Seymour Photo.]

Miss Elizabeth McCormick brought Archduke Felix, Baron de Hedry, and Mrs. Freeman Hinckley, and Countess Cardelli came with her son, Giovanni, who is public relations liaison officer of the opera. Others of their guests were Mr. and Mrs. James Ames, Mrs. Kersey Coates Reed, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dewey Jr., Robert F. Carr, and Lolita and Jack Mitchell. There were many other guests from all parts of the city, the William Raglands, John Clarksons, the Carl Wynnes of Evanston.

More and more music! Serge and Mme. de Koussevitsky arrived Thursday to visit Mr. and Mrs. John A. Carpenter until after the maestro's great concert on Dec. 13 at the Auditorium.

On Tuesday, Dec. 12, the Casino celebrates with a dinner-dance in honor of Mrs. Joseph G. Coleman, the well-loved Nancy who was its first president a quarter of a century ago. Nancy was ever one of our first citizens, in war and in peace. Hers is the backbone that brought Passavant hospital to its present magnificent quarters in the Northwestern sector near Lake Shore drive, from dark, shut-in streets over west. Hers were the standards that kept the Casino club, from its early days, a model of elegance and good form, weathering, unshaken, the depression.

So it will be a great dinner with most amusing divertissement for which Doris Winterbotham has laid plans wide and deep. A birthday cake in honor of the Casino's 25th birthday will appear, and one hopes it will be like the one that Harriet Woodward had to celebrate the birthday of her father, Lyman Walton and Ove Vett. This was a magnificent pink cake all flopping over with pink sugar roses and candles and perched on a pink stand from which came music small and fine, tinkling "Happy Birthday to You."

M. Cauuet's Theatre International came to pass Monday afternoon at the small Goodman before a very gay audience. All the families of participants were present, with much handclapping, huge bouquets of red roses for stars Mary Cramer and Madeleine Maher, and money in the till for the Croix Rouge. Mrs. Byron Harvey Jr. did two French monologues which she learned the day before, and covered herself with glory for her good French and clever acting. In the play that followed, "My Wife's Deceased Mother," we had the pleasure of seeing the lovely Mrs. Maher in a bed decked with polka-dotted linens and wearing very nice, white brocade pajamas indeed, and trying to have a much needed rest. Mrs. Cramer was the slavey with hair in curl papers, wearing red flannels and a billowy waist. M. Cauuet was the husband, and Capt. William Waters the valet who brings news of the demise of "maman," thereby causing many screams, fainting fits and excitement generally.

The plot "unthickens" when they find that the valet, by mistake, had gotten into the wrong house. The bad news belonged next door. Capt. Walters, who played the valet very cleverly, has lived in Paris many years, and is a new man in town, very fond of society and "tres aimable."

Sitting in the first row were Mrs. Arthur Meeker, Arthur Meeker, Ambrose Cramer, Philip Maher, and nearby Mrs. Hugh J. McBirney, Mrs. Thomas Hinde, Mrs. Dudley Root, Mrs. Byron Harvey, Mrs. William Burry Jr., Mrs. Donald McPherson, and Mrs. John C. Murphy.

The opulent event of last week was Sunday at the Auditorium, when the New York Philharmonic came to Chicago. It was like the good old times —$10,000 raised at one fell swoop for the Children's Memorial hospital. The president, Mrs. William Greenlee, gave beforehand at the Casino a quite large luncheon for Conductor John Barbirolli and his English bride. There were other luncheons, too, and the day ended socially with the English-Speaking union's reception which had much life and movement.

The good scout deed of the day was done by our Chicago symphony, when its management agreed to let New York have the fun of playing, for the first time in Chicago, Weinberger's "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree." We were to have had it the Friday before, but, after all, this rollicking piece, inspired by the movie of King George singing with his young subjects, was dedicated to the Philharmonic.

The New York symphony is larger than ours. It cost $5,000 to roll it out here for this one occasion, and John Barbirolli was leading for the fourteenth consecutive extra concert. He has all the Italian dash of manner, black patent leather hair, smart turnout of striped trousers and wide shouldered morning coat, and leads gorgeously. No antics. Casinogoers were amazed that the maestro didn't prove to be a tall man. Far from it. Barbirolli is a pocket Apollo, but leads from a high dais. It was amusing to hear the true music lovers in the foyer during the entr'acte telling in what way other conductors give Beethoven's Seventh, and how this and that could be different. In the sea of humans one met Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hamill, Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Stock, the Arthur Cables, Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, Mrs. P. A. Valentine, Mrs. Charles G. King, Dr. and Mrs. Duncan Browne, the Gustavus Swifts, Mrs. Robert J. Thorne, Francis Neilson, the Charles H. Morses, the Orville J. Taylors, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Schwarz, Mrs. A. H. Patterson and Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Dewey.

The boxes were sold last summer by Mrs. Valentine and Mrs. Charles Foster, and box-holders have had months to fill them with persons who like the symphony.

At the Casino Mrs. Rufus Dawes, Mrs. Frederic Upham and Mrs. Greenlee received English speakers in the foyer as they poured in from the concert. And later they were the target of all eyes at a tea table in the ballroom center, sitting with Mr. and Mrs. Barbirolli, Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Stock, and Consul General Lewis Bernays. Mrs. John Crerar and Mrs. Bernays were presiding at the two large tea tables set out in the Fountain room. Others there with parties were Mrs. Paul Healy of Paris, Mrs. Richard T. Crane, Mrs. P. A. Valentine, Col. George Langhorne, Mrs. Phelps Hoyt, Mrs. Scott Durand and Mrs. Frank Mulford.

Consul General and Mrs. Bernays were at home informally Monday afternoon with Mrs. Royden Keith and Mrs. Welsh Dickinson assisting. These Mondays at the British consulate have been in abeyance for a year and a half, or during the severe illness of the consul general, who is now happily in circulation again.

Another member of the world which enjoys things is again with us. Ira Nelson Morris has given up his migratory habits and taken an apartment at 219 Lake Shore drive. Mr. Morris has had a decorator to do the interior and is taking furniture out of storage; so it looks as if it might be a long war.

Coming to Chicago from Paris after the holidays is Count Serge Fleury of the foreign office. The French as a nation are not inclined to propaganda. They believe in letting their charm and culture, their music, literature, and other works speak for them; so Fleury, who is one of the most chic littérateurs in France, may give a few lectures, but not to incline American hearts to battle on French soil.

Another interesting lecturer was Mrs. E. R. Michejda who talked at the Friday club. She delivered a most sizzling talk about what happened in Poland in September.

Elissa Landi to Talk Here December 11

Elissa Landi, actress and author, will lecture on "Writing for the Theater" under the auspices of the Friends of American Writers Monday afternoon, Dec. 11, in the Red Lacquer room of the Palmer House.

Best known for her portrayal of romantic rôles in the films, Miss Landi herself has a romantic background. Her mother, Countess Zenardi-Landi, has written a book claiming that she was a daughter of Empress Elizabeth of Austria, wife of Emperor Franz Josef. Besides acting on stage and screen, Miss Landi has written five novels and two plays, in one of which, "Rebellion in Shadow," she herself appeared. Miss Landi was born in Venice, was educated in England, and speaks four languages. She formerly was the wife of an English barrister.

Miss Landi's lecture will benefit the Foundation for Literature fund, thru which the Friends of American Writers each year award $1,000 to a midwestern author for outstanding achievement during the year. Mrs. A. D. Theobald is chairman of the ways and means committee, which is arranging the benefit. Mrs. George Burnett Van Buren heads the Foundation for Literature committee.

Interesting Illinois lore, much of it material brought to light by Mrs. Paul J. Wimsey thru research, will be included in her lecture on "Famous People and Places of Illinois" next Tuesday evening at Fullerton hall of the Art institute. The Native Daughters of Illinois are sponsoring this free public lecture in celebration of Statehood day, anniversary of Illinois' entrance as a state into the Union.

As conservation chairman of the 2d district, Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Wimsey was instrumental in having the drive to the Planetarium named for Achsah Bond, wife of Illinois' first governor.

Mrs. Wimsey has assembled a collection of portraits of the wives of Illinois governors which she has presented to the state historical library in Springfield, Ill., and she hopes that a duplicate collection eventually will hang in the executive mansion in Springfield. Mrs. Wimsey herself is descended from pioneers who settled in southern Illinois. She is a former program chairman of the Native Daughters of Illinois.

The Big Sisters will have the Rev. James A. Magner as the principal speaker at their second quarterly meeting and luncheon Tuesday at Biggs, 50 East Huron street. Father Magner's topic will be "Pillars of Friendship." Helen Bartush of the Chicago City Opera company will sing, and Hattie Krause will play accompaniments. Brief reports will be given by heads of the Big Sisters' working committees. Mrs. George V. McIntyre heads this organization, and Mrs. Frank T. Ford is program chairman.

The Catholic Poetry Society of America, Chicago chapter, will hear a discussion of "Christian Optimism," by the Rev. John Murphy tomorrow evening at the Auditorium hotel. Jane Harding of the Newberry library will speak on Gaelic books recently arrived from Europe, and Mary Alice Elson will interpret poems of Adele Jordan Tarr and of Marion Tarr Moody. Miss Nora Cawley has planned the program. Miss Josephine Rice heads the organization.

Mrs. M. J. Marland, president of the Native Daughters, will receive Wednesday evening with Mrs. Franklin M. Miller, Mrs. Clarence G. Goodwin and Mrs. William Harrison Cade, former presidents. Matt Powers will contribute a musical program, with Miss Alice Roberts accompanying. Miss Eva Young has arranged the evening.

Mrs. Reimund Baumann, wife of the Danish consul, will be initiated as a patroness of Gamma chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota national music fraternity at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the Woman's University club, 410 South Michigan avenue.

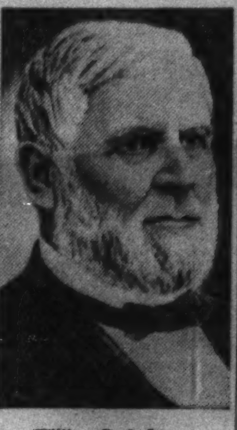
When Chicago Was Young

By Herma Clark

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend Julia Boyd of New York.

Chicago, Aug. 28, 1891.

Dear Julia: On opening the new Lippincott's magazine, what was my delight to find an article by Mrs. John B. Sherwood on Chicago social life! You know she spent some time in our city last spring and I suppose it is from that stay she got material for this review. She finds much good in us, I'm happy to say. After the severe strictures of Rudyard Kipling and others, in various papers, this is balm to our wounded spirits. Mrs. Sherwood says Chicago society is fresh as a rose . . . that it has four elements making for success—great wealth, beautiful houses, a stimulating climate, and a set of educated, refined women.



William B. Ogden.

Another bouquet she tosses at us is this, which any group might envy: "Little envy, little gossip, and no detraction is found in Chicago society." Perhaps we don't deserve all that. Dissatisfied people are found everywhere. But at least we don't show such an unlovable trait to the stranger in our midst.

Mrs. Sherwood thinks Chicago women do not take society seriously enough, though they make the visit of an out-of-town friend so delightful. She feels our people are not often in their lovely houses. That is true. Chicagoans travel a great deal. Their great houses are frequently empty, while the family is away in Europe, Florida, Washington. Perhaps this energy and money might be spent better on entertaining at home. Mrs. Sherwood seems to think so.

She suggests that we should have a fashionable hour for driving in the parks, as is the case in London, where there is the "Ladies' mile," and Rotten row. Her tribute to our equipages is most gratifying. She thinks we have fine tastes in carriages and in horseflesh. "The whole pomp and circumstance of locomotion is attended to," she writes, "but they do not drive to meet each other."

The very nicest thing Mrs. Sherwood says in the whole article is this: "Chicago was fortunate in its pioneers. William B. Ogden, its most famous citizen, once told me that none but good people ever came to Chicago to stay. Whether he meant that they pushed the unworthy ones into the lake, I don't know, but it has secured a very good set who are there now. They are vastly agreeable, accomplished, full of music, fond of art, devoted to literature. They have endless clubs for all sorts of things and they dress well, which is the most advanced of the arts.

"Their hospitality is endless," she goes on, "but not undiscriminating. They have much of the exclusiveness of Boston and Philadelphia. I don't think it a society where adventurers would flourish and the toady does not do well at all. His home is in New York; he perishes in the fresh air of the Great Lakes."

She ends thus: "The only thing that could console one for living one hundred years longer would be to see what Chicago will be like then. If it can do all it has done in less than one hundred years, what can it do in two hundred? For we must remember that Fort Dearborn, our outmost post against the Indians, dates back only to 1804, and that was the beginning of Chicago.

"Now that it is to have the exciting episode of the World's Columbian Exposition, all can see its physical advantages and its beautiful houses. Not all can see its best society, more's the pity, for it is worth an intimate acquaintance."

I do want you to read the whole article, for I believe it is quite fair to us.

Much love.

MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

Yule Giving Foremost in Clubs' Plans

By Betty Browning.

Christmas is only three weeks away! The frosty air, the brilliantly decorated shop windows, the hurrying crowds of shoppers are not the only reminders of that festive fact. Santa Clauses working for the Volunteers of America already are ringing their bells at busy street corners, and Salvation Army lassies keep their kettles boiling with tinkling coins dropped by passers-by.

It is not too soon for the forehanded to begin collecting Christmas presents and contributions for those who otherwise might not have a happy holiday. Scarcely an organization but will make provision for the less fortunate in the next few weeks. A number of clubs will do at least a part of their Christmas giving as Good Fellows in coöperation with THE TRIBUNE.

And all this will be done in the true spirit of Yuletide joy. Already Christmas carols are ringing out wherever club members congregate, and Christmas parties crowd the calendar.

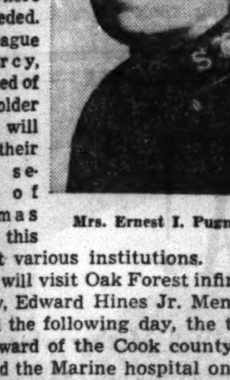
Even after their retirement women officers of the Salvation Army and wives of officers who traditionally share their husbands' titles and work, continue to extend a helping hand where it is needed. The League of Mercy, composed of these older women will begin their annual series of Christmas parties this week at various institutions.



Mrs. Ernest I. Pugmire.

They will visit Oak Forest infirmary Tuesday, Edward Hines Jr. Memorial hospital the following day, the tuberculosis ward of the Cook county hospital and the Marine hospital on Dec. 11, the Municipal Tuberculosis sanitarium on the 13th, the county jail on the 14th, and the Riverside sanitarium and Dunning on subsequent occasions.

With them the visitors bring carollers or an Army band, Christmas gifts and goodies, and special Christmas issues of the War Cry, the Salvation Army magazine. It is not just at Christmas that the League of Mercy remembers these people, for members visit most of the institutions every week thruout the year.

The coins dropped into the Salvation Army kettles pay for only a part of its Christmas activities. Christmas tree parties will bring gayety to at least 5,000 children, and 3,000 persons will have Christmas dinners thru the Army's efforts. A toy shop shortly will open in the Pure Oil building, where needy families helped by the Army may obtain new toys for their children free of charge.

Next Thursday and Friday the annual pre-Christmas sale of needlework and other articles made by the girls at the Army's home and hospital for unwed mothers will be on sale at the home, 5040 North Pulaski road. Many of the articles are contributed by former residents at the home who hope thus to repay the Army for the help and care they have received. Each year 300 girls are cared for at the home. Mrs. Ernest I. Pugmire, commissioner and wife of the Army's commanding officer in the central west area, officially will open the sale at a tea and program Thursday afternoon.

The St. Columkille Day nursery auxiliary will hold its annual Christmas shower from 3 to 7 o'clock today at the nursery, 527 North Paulina street. The fact that Sister Mary Eileen, superintendent, will celebrate her silver jubilee today will add gayety to the occasion. A musical revue will be presented. Miss Dorothy Krickl is chairman of the party.

The 20th annual bazar and luncheon to be sponsored by the Woman's club of the Chicago and Northwestern railway system Wednesday at the clubrooms, 506 West Washington street, will raise money for the organization's Christmas basket fund.

The Women's Trade Union league of Chicago will hold its annual Christmas sale Saturday at its clubhouse, 630 South Ashland boulevard. A turkey dinner will be served both at noon and in the evening.

A Christmas box will be assembled by Mrs. Alfred J. Smith and sent to Miss Linda Neville of Lexington, Ky., who directs the sorority's national social service work for the prevention of blindness among children in Kentucky mountains.

Edwards, state chairman, will preside.

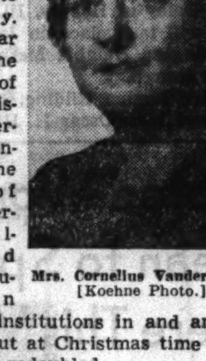
Plans for a Christmas party will be made by the Chicago Civic Business and Professional Woman's club at 7:30 o'clock tomorrow at the Pittsfield building. Miss Marie Hetherington will conduct an occupational round table. Miss Maryon Shepard is president.

Forty Christmas cheer parties will be given for the less fortunate this year by the Ladies of Isabella, beginning the middle of December and continuing on into January. All the year around the Ladies of Isabella visit and personally minister to the needs of elderly persons, children and unfortunates in scores of institutions in and around Chicago, but at Christmas time their efforts are redoubled.



Mrs. Cornelius Vandervoort. [Koehne Photo.]

Each person at the institution visited always receives a gift selected for him or her by a member of one of the Ladies' 31 councils. Mrs. Emma Huising Wall, supreme grand lady since the Ladies of Isabella were organized, frequently plays Santa Claus herself at the parties. This year Mrs. Cornelius Vandervoort, supreme trustee and grand lady of Mother of Perpetual Help council, is Christmas cheer chairman, with Mrs. Catherine Fraser, district deputy, serving as Christmas cheer secretary.

A preliminary meeting to set dates for the parties will be held Wednesday at 22 West Monroe street.

Parisian Galas Held to Aid in War Work

Serge Lifar and Lorcia in the pantomime, and Francis Poulenc, in uniform, played, with Jacques Février, one of Poulenc's pieces for two pianos.

Seen among the ambassadors, ministers, generals, and other official and mundane celebrities were the duke of Windsor, in khaki uniform, and the duchess, in a dark blue dress with a sort of small bonnet in the Dutch style. It is not the thing to wear evening dress for those who are not in uniform.

The comparative inactivity on the main front has upset the plans for hospital service that were being laid, on a large scale, in many parts of France. The American hospital in Neuilly, taken over by the French military authorities, has had virtually no cases of wounded, and what military cases there have been are mostly of illness from other causes. The duchess of Windsor had arranged to turn the ducal property at Cap d'Antibes, the Château de la Croe, into an ambulance as the French say, but as events have not yet justified putting it into operation, she has been in recent weeks in Paris, where the duke frequently comes from his duties at the British headquarters to join her. It will be remembered that some months ago they took a house in the Auteuil section of Paris, near the Bois de Boulogne, in the Boulevard Suchet.

When the fear of air raids was at its height they considered building a special shelter in their garden. They found it would cost about $600, so they decided to use their cellar or any other nearby air shelter. It so happens that their house has a sort of dome, or cupola, which it is not easy to screen from the light at night. They called in Mr. Whiteway, an Englishman who has long lived in Paris, and who used to see the duke quite often when the other war was on. Mr. Whiteway, known to countless Americans and British in Paris, proposed that some means should be used to screen the light that would otherwise stream thru the dome and would be less somber in the daytime than the blue paint and paper that had already been installed for the purpose. So he arranged a screen of black stuff that can be drawn back in the daytime, letting in the natural light, and closed at night.

Mr. Whiteway, formerly connected with one of the large department stores in Paris, but now applying an American invention for escaping the ravages of moths, acts as chef d'ilot, or head man for the shelter in the suburb of Paris, where he resides. As far as possible, he assorts the people under his jurisdiction so that they will not be thrown together too much at hazard in the cellars when the alarms sound. This is quite different from the situation in many of the Paris shelters, where no class distinctions, as it were, are observed. During the recent alarms a few days ago virtually no one went to the cellars, and it is understood that henceforth alarms will not be sounded unless there is serious danger.

The comtesse de Chambrun [Clara Longworth] and her husband, Gen. Comte Adelbert de Chambrun, recently returned to Paris after staying some weeks in the United States. Both of them having been very active in the other war [l'autre, as the Parisians call it, without adding guerre; they regard the present conflict as not having more than started, and consider its issue a foregone conclusion]. Mme. de Chambrun was in Paris during every raid of airplanes or bombardment by the "Big Bertha," and therefore looks upon the false alarms so far experienced as negligible, not to say annoying.

Occasionally she has under her hospitable roof some of the celebrated men of arms, and the other day one of her guests was the young archduke of Hapsburg, not at all under arms, quite the contrary, but watching, as does his mother who is with him, events very closely. His mother, the former Empress Zita, sister of Prince Sixte de Bourbon-Parme, seems far more interested than is her son in having him one day play a royal or imperial rôle.

All-Illinois Art Show Is Weak, Declares Critic

By Eleanor Jewett.

The All-Illinois Society of the Fine Arts has recently hung its fourteenth annual exhibition of works by Illinois artists at the Stevens hotel. The exhibit will continue to Jan. 31, 1940. The show is much along the same lines that previous exhibits of the society have made familiar to us. The organization is one in which the pleasant, rather than the abnormal, is sought. The society's avowed purpose is to see "an original work of art by an artist of Illinois in every school and home in Illinois." The type of picture in the current exhibit would fit easily into any Illinois home or school, but, the catch is, that with very few exceptions their entry would cause not so much as a ripple.

It seems to us that by imperceptible degrees the artists who make up this organization are letting it down. The jurying of the pictures is a lenient affair; the severity in jurying, it is felt, should begin at home. If the artist considers his work ready for a jury then the formal jury should give it consideration, and in every possible case, acceptance. But helping too many lame ducks over the stile will not in the long run benefit either the society or the artists. The only way in which the All-Illinois can develop to become a strength in the state is by the loyal coöperation of every painter it serves; they must paint their finest pictures for its exhibitions and submit only those.

In the current exhibit we could name a dozen and more pictures by artists who for one reason or another have held out on the society; they can do better work than they have chosen to send in.

Secondly, in the All-Illinois' stand for sane painting, it does not bar originality of conception and execution. One might think it did to look over the rows of familiar setups offered us now at the Stevens. Originality is wanted, badly, and with it masterful execution.

Because there are bad drawing and a monotony of subject in other exhibits, exhibits which contain much in the way of Socialist propaganda and pseudo-French modernism, and because the All-Illinois has set its face against both these types of contemporary art is no reason why the nonmodernist painters making up its membership should lie back and be satisfied with commonplace statements of insipid ideas. We think a cold dash of water to shake them from their present apathy and self-content would be a life saver to three-fourths of the list of contributing artists in the current show.

The banal and indifferent are as great a menace to contemporary art as are the morbid and the derivative picture. We need finer and better pictures, and we hope they will come thru the All-Illinois.

In the current exhibit there are a number of promising works. If, as one is told, two or three good pictures make a show [personally, we have never believed in the alibi] the show has that many and more to offer in proof of its merit. The most original and striking still life is "Garden Rainbow," by Minnie A. Carlson and, to be enjoyed, are "Girls and White Rocks," by Adam Emory Albright; "The Dawn," by Dale Nichols; "Storm Toilers," by Ruth L. Schwaegerle; "Struggle," by Sophia Davis Talbot; "The Happy Fiddler," by Antonin Sterba; "The Sycamore," by Ruth K. Hibbs; "The Harbor Town," by Louis J. Kaep; "Winter," by Lydia D. Pohl; "Michigan Pasture," by Robert P. Kilbert; "Theater of Nature," by Richard A. Chase, and "Portrait of Mrs. Frederick Huenken," by Douglas Ewen.

The gold medal of the society was awarded to "Beverly Shores, Indiana Dunes," by Arno Bretsnyder, for a work in oils; the downstate gold medal went to "Drowsy Village," by Edward Nicholson, and the gold medal offered for the best water color was given to "Homestead," by Donald J. Mills.

Christmas is just around the corner and so, too, is the New Year. Two calendars have come to our notice, and two sets of unusual Christmas cards. The calendars are the "American National Calendar 1940" and the "Artists' Calendar." The National calendar is a stunning piece of work. It consists of splendid photographs of places of interest in the United States or of American sports. One of the finest pictures, for example, is that of racing on Long Island sound; the lines of the yachts with their wind-filled sails are thrilling.

The country is covered from end to end. There are brilliant photographs of New York and of Chicago, of the cotton pickers down south and the fishing lakes in the north. Florida palms, Mount Vernon place in Baltimore, the formal gardens of Williamsburg, Coolidge dam in Arizona, Old Faithful at Yellowstone park; each turn of the page brings something of beauty or interest to light. Each week has its own picture. For a delightful way to learn the wonders of the United States I give you this calendar! It is magnificent.

The Artists' Calendar comes as something of a letdown after the other. It is compiled by Chicago artists of the modern group and is definitely modernist in tone. The illustrations rarely fit the seasons [which seems quite in keeping with the atmosphere thrown off by the compilation] and the illustrations taken one by one out of the context, disregarding what month they are intended to decorate, are a pretty melancholy assortment. They make, it seems to me, as perfect an example as could be asked for of the other side of the picture of what is wrong with contemporary art, the pretty-pretty side of which the All-Illinois exhibit demonstrates. For a dismal entrance upon each week of 1940, let us commend this calendar to you; it is a sure antidote to optimism. There is not a light, gay touch in the entire series, and the sendoff for 1941, the last picture on the calendar, Andrene Kauffman's "The Grave of My Medusa," sums up the horror of 1940 and sets one on the same downward path for 1941. Extraordinary that such conceptions as these go under the name of art, and a pity.

An exhibition of recent paintings by Ruth Baird opened last Friday at the Findlay galleries, 424 South Michigan avenue, to continue thru the month. A charming exhibit of color etchings by Elizabeth Orton Jones and of delightful caricatures and child drawings by Peggy Palmer Burrows makes these galleries a pleasant place to stop even on a busy day.

"GIRLS AND WHITE ROCKS" BY ALBRIGHT

Adam Emory Albright has this charming picture in the current All-Illinois Society of the Fine Arts exhibition at the Stevens Hotel. He is also represented in the Fifty Years of American Art exhibit at the Art institute.

Sleeveless Knitted Jacket

By Jean Macdonald.

Here is what might be called an "all-around jacket." Sleeveless, it may be worn over a sports dress for summer. For winter and wear as a shield against unpleasant office drafts, it affords necessary protection without interference with duty, and still maintains that "chic" which is synonymous with the business woman. It is a quick and simple knitting job. The instructions are available in 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, and 42 inches bust measurement.

For instructions in knitting the sleeveless all-around jacket, No. X-397, send 10 cents in stamps or coin to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 5th avenue, New York City.

Give Your Home a Lasting Gift for Christmas

"Beautiful Bedrooms," a booklet by Edith Weigle, goes into detail in explaining ways to furnish and decorate three different types of bedroom: The colonial, the Early American, and the modern. It is 3 cents by mail, 2 cents at the Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street and Tribune Tower lobby.

By Edith Weigle.

Why not give your home a Christmas present this year—something to make it more beautiful, comfortable, and enjoyable? Every member of the family will benefit from such a gift, and it will be the sort that brings pleasure long after the holidays are gone and forgotten.

Select that piece of furniture or those decorative accessories now, before the full rush is on, to allow plenty of time for delivery. Following are items we've chosen as having wide appeal, as being moderately priced, and as being well made and distinctive.

First, there is an unusually lovely gift for that mahogany, colonial bedroom of yours. Whether or not you happen to have a four poster with canopy top you'll be able to use the handsome bedspread, a copy of the original Henry Clay coverlet, made about 1830, and now in the Metropolitan museum in New York. This spread has been used in the movie of "Gone with the Wind" in one of the bedrooms in Tara, Scarlett's family home.

Ten different colors, a soft faded rose predominating, are combined in the elaborately embroidered flower and grape vine design. Altho it looks like a mellow old piece of handwork, you can safely put this bedspread in the family laundry, for colors, fabric, and embroidery are all washable. It was made in Dalton, Georgia, and is one of a line of "heirloom" designs that are now available in Chicago.

The spreads in this group are all charming, in either maple or mahogany colonial bedrooms, or may be used in ones of Victorian flavor.

If you've a teen age daughter, a delightful Christmas gift for her would be one of the pretty little unpainted dressing tables, which are quite inexpensive, as you give them the finishing touches yourself, painting them to suit any color scheme, and making for them those big, billowy skirts that suit them so well to a young girl's use.

Also, in the unpainted furniture department of the stores you will find a number of other excellent gifts for the house: Hanging book shelves, bookcases, small tables, chairs—even beds and dining room pieecs. There are large, unframed mirrors, too, to combine with some of the items.

Most homes will appreciate the gift of a decorative screen. Of sturdy construction and covered with beautiful wallpaper designs, or with photo murals, a screen can be used to conceal an unsightly corner, or to protect from drafts, or to fill in a bare spot in the room. It pays to buy a good one, for it should last for years.

This is true of tables, too. A cheap, poorly made table is never a bargain, for it will soon become unsteady and its finish will never be pleasing, even at the start. But it's possible to find really fine small tables that are not at all expensive. There is that charming little folding mahogany table, for example, that copies an 18th century design, and that is just right for pulling up to your chair when you want to write a note, or play a game of solitaire, or do some sewing.

And there are those lovely little end tables with built-in metal receptacles for holding plants. They're available in both light and dark woods and are most reasonably priced. Some of the most distinctive nests of tables we've come across are Victorian in feeling, being finished in black with a subdued floral design in soft colors. They are really lovely.

Lamps, too, are always welcome house gifts. There is the handsome table and lamp combined, for instance, which consists of a solid mahogany pie crust table with tripod base and attached lamp with eggshell toned silk shade. The lamp is on a long mahogany arm or rod which rises from one side of the table top.

Less formal, and ever so charming, are the table lamps which reveal bouquets of colored artificial flowers in their crystal bases, and those which copy the delightful Bohemian glass bottles and vases of our grandmothers' day. For the dining room there are the ever popular, aristocratic looking hurricane shades for candles. These are perfect decorative touches for a mahogany sideboard.

Taxco: Where Progress Skips By in a Hurry

By Anson Brown.

"Do you speak English?" the portly woman asked.

TAXCO, MEXICO.

"A leetle, madam," answered my American friend.

"Then perhaps you can tell me why all the houses here in Taxco have red tiled roofs?" Her notebook was poised as she chewed the end of her pencil.

"Because," my quick witted friend responded, "zey say zat ze color red she attracts ze sunshine. Zerefor wiz ze red on every rooftop we have—how you say?—perpetual sunshine all ze time."

The portly tourist in her knickers and green sun visor wrote it down in the ever ready notebook, smiled graciously at us, shuffled away to tell her friends. Little did she know that beneath our Mexican tan, our sombreros, and serapes were four Americans born and reared in Illinois. I wonder what her local club will think when she reads from her notes about the Taxco roofs!

Of all the interesting spots in the world Taxco, I believe, heads the list. Here the word picturesque at last takes on a real meaning, not only in relation to the streets and buildings but to the people, American residents included.

Taxco, with the cathedral in the middle background.

A beggar at Taxco.

Perhaps you are skeptical, as I am, when overloquacious friends rave about a place and tell you not to miss it. If so, have no fear about Taxco. If you have a vestige of romance left in your traveling soul, Taxco will reveal it. [I dropped in for an afternoon and have stayed three weeks!]

We travel south out of Mexico City—by bus or cab, as one chooses—for 103 miles. We go for two hours beyond Cuernavaca over a beautiful mountain road. The highway stretches along the valleys, clings to the sides of the hills, pushes its way beneath an ancient aqueduct and rounds a curve into the city of Taxco.

City? Maybe not. Village is more appropriate, for it straggles itself over a group of hills. It is made up of bright little stucco houses with red tiled roofs, small windows, painted sills, each bungalow stairstepped one above the other until they are hidden from view by massive laurel trees. And the streets, all cobblestone, are bleached by the tireless years of feet and blend in neatly with the air of antiquity.

I have been told that Henri de Borda, a Frenchman, discovered silver in the Taxco hills two centuries back. He developed mines, paid the men well, and founded the town as it is today. It was modeled after his own village in France.

In an effort to keep Taxco as it was, the city fathers won't even let you install a new bathtub without their permission.

There are no telephones, except one in the postoffice. If you wish to send a message to some one in the village you step to your front gate and yell: "Muchacho!" Ten or 20 lads will appear out of nowhere. To one you give the written message with delivery instructions, and he will charge 10 centavos to deliver it. And if he brings an answer back he will get another 3 cents.

Life is easy here, and cheap. Four of us lived in the Kitagawa house, on a hill even higher than the cathedral spires, at a cost of $1.25 a day apiece for everything, including the squat cook Romano, who speaks no English. We had our own garden, with orchid plants in it, a bright blue gate that squeaked on its hinges, and Niki the cat, who had kittens in the middle of my bed while we were all out having an afternoon punch at Dona Bertha's cantina on the main cuadra.

And Dona Bertha—ah! there's one of the real characters of the Mexican interlude. Tall, lank, and dark, she must be in her late forties. Her eyes always laugh thru a huge pair of horn rimmed spectacles, and her tiny bar, crowded there by the cathedral, contains only three tables and 24 milk stools. It is a "must" of Taxco to gather there every afternoon at 5, and if the cantina becomes overcrowded before the gossipy hour is over it is perfectly proper to sit on the cobblestones just outside the door and sip her special tangy habanero punches.

I couldn't understand, at first, why my watch was so fast. Then I learned that the day before my arrival the clock on the church tower had stopped. It had taken the sexton 20 minutes to wind the huge wheels, and then he found he could not reach the hands to reset them. So every one in the village merely set his watch back 20 minutes, and life rolled merrily on!

The attitude of Taxco is the attitude of living life to its fullest. There are gayety and friendship and unusual people. A young Hollywood scenario writer and his Russian wife, formerly with the Ballet Russe, live in one of the town's most beautiful homes. Natalie Scott, who wrote "Your Mexican Kitchen," has prepared a special dinner for us. "But you must come early to see the sunset," she cautions. "Aunt" Effie Seachrest, who runs an art gallery in Kansas City, spends her summers at Casa Davis on the edge of Taxco. She wants us to come to tea. Bill Spratling stops work for a while in his silver shop to relate a hair-raising account of his trip from California to Acapulco in his own boat, with only two kittens as company. He was lost for three days. One of the cats died; the other learned to catch fish.

All this is over now and I finish my scribbling in Dona Bertha's as the daylight begins to end. One by one my friends are going back to their tiled houses for supper. Vicenti, with his guitar, sings one more song. The long shadows of the coming darkness throw themselves across the plaza. The laurel trees are quiet, the wind has gone. Behind the great cathedral silhouetting the tall spires are puffs of clouds. The sun has turned them to orange. Dona Bertha stands in the doorway to watch the colors change. How lucky she is to have such a show every evening, when the cantina is quiet for an hour, and how forlorn are we that on the morrow our tracks are turning us north!

THE VOICE OF THE TRAVELER

Letters regarding travel conditions and experiences are welcomed. Address: Travel Editor, Chicago Tribune.

SOUTH OF THE BORDER.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Nov. 26.—To the Travel Editor: Last year I took a trip which is available to the vast army of office workers who have only two weeks vacation each year. It was into Mexico, which is as alien as any Balkan country, and much more accessible, even in peacetimes.

The harbor at Vera Cruz is so dramatic that it looks like a highly successful stage drop. There was the brief confusion of the customs, and then we separated to see the city. Some took buses. Others preferred to wander by themselves. Vera Cruz, with its broken sidewalks, its dirt, its picturesque inhabitants, its Spanish architecture, colorful and flamboyant, is such a typical example of how northerners think the semitropics should look that you feel it is perfectly staged by a master director. "I expect the pony ballet to prance on to the scene any minute," one tourist confided.

After lunch most of our party took the train for Orizaba, a little town nestling at the foot of Mount Orizaba, the second highest peak in North America. You go up thru tropical jungles, broken by tiny clearings containing a single little thatched hut surrounded by a tiny garden plot; banana trees line the right of way; far below mountain streams drop into vivid valleys. You see Mexican women washing in the streams where their naked children are bathing. At the stations venders offer fresh pineapples, tiny apple-bananas, mangoes, avocados, and containers packed with gardenias, bougainvillea, or wild orchids, all for ridiculously low prices. A dime will buy dozens of gardenias at the present rate of exchange.

Orizaba was fascinating. We saw a milkman, perched, as are all true Mexicans, on the rump of his tiny burro, ladling out milk from the tin pails astride the animal, into a little blue bowl held out by a pretty customer. We visited the smelly market place, and some of the crowd peering into a romantic grilled doorway were invited in by the friendly homeowners.

Tuesday we were in Mexico City. We drove around to glass factories, to Chapultepec, heavy with memories of the tragic adventure of Maximilian and his beautiful Carlotta; to the Opera house, the government house, the museum, and the baroque cathedral.

Wednesday we drove out to the Floating Gardens of Xochimilco, to the recently restored monastery of San Acolman, which I liked better than anything else in Mexico, and to the fabulous Pyramids of the Sun.

Thursday was a gorgeous day to remember. We headed southeast to Cuernavaco, the summer capital of Mexico City residents, where we saw a whole cluster of cathedrals and the beautiful Borda gardens. Then we continued across the somberly rich Mexican landscapes, on roads winding thru the mountains above deep-hued plains, until suddenly amid the trees we saw a grouping of bright red roofs, and we were in Taxco.

The beauty of Taxco is not subtle. It hits you in the eye and makes you wish you could spend months there. The town climbs up and down the mountain, its cobbled streets so narrow that cars have to maneuver back and forth to make the sharp turns. Against the vivid green of the hills white walls dazzle you in the brilliant sunlight, and every house is topped by a bright red tile roof. Masses of purple bougainvillea blur the too sharp outlines. It is an artist's paradise, and you see plenty of them, their canvases set up in the middle of the market place, or at vantage points along the hillsides. Sitting out on a terrace overlooking all that beauty, we were hardly able to eat for the grandeur about us. Afterward we visited the cathedral, elaborately carved and dripping with gold leaf, as are all of them; oh-ed and ah-ed over the beautiful silverware for which Spratling's shop is famous; then we had that lovely hundred mile ride home thru the long afternoon.

On Friday trips were planned for those who wished them, but the majority of us wished to do more shopping and exploring of Mexico City. We had had many opportunities before, but you can always spend more time along the Avenida de la Reforma, sitting in the plaza, visiting in Sanborn's, or looking at the tantalizing shop window displays of silver, leatherware, and baskets.

We didn't just sit in the evenings. There were night clubs, operas, and [in case you had missed it in the United States] every movie house in Mexico seemed to be exhibiting Mr. Disney's justly famous epic, "Blanca Nieves y los Siete Enanos." Since we spent no Sunday in Mexico City, we didn't have an opportunity to see a bullfight or the charros in their brilliant costumes riding thru Chapultepec park, but something must be left until next time.

"The rich people come in the winter," some Mexican said, "and the poor ones in the summer." Very true. None of us were wealthy. And we were on a conducted tour, despised by some veteran travelers. But if you have just two weeks for a vacation, if you want to see something entirely different and charming, and if you want a swell time, let me recommend one of the boats bound from New Orleans for Vera Cruz.

ROCKWELL BINGHAM.

Expedition Finds Breastplate of Ancient Headman

NAPLES, Italy.—A breastplate believed to have been the corselet of Tzara Ghemes the Gojjamite headman defeated and killed in battle about 1200 A. D., has been brought to Italy from Ethiopia. It will be seen at the Naples Triennial Colonial exposition which opens in May, 1940.

Richly wrought of leather, gold, and cloth, the relic is one of a number of objects discovered in the legendary churches of Lalibela and its surroundings by a government archæological expedition.

A rare manuscript, deciphered by Carlo Conti Rossini, Italian academician, indicates that Tzara Ghemes was slain by Nacutelab, emperor of the house of Zague. Having stripped the breastpiece from his adversary, the conqueror is believed to have presented it to one of the Lalibela churches. Until found by the Italian expedition, it had been hanging in the same church since that time. It is still in fairly good condition.

New Hotel Representative.

Frank H. Murphy, formerly assistant general passenger agent of the French Line in Chicago, has been named western representative of the Mayflower-Knickerbocker group of hotels in New York City. He opened an office last week at 820 North Michigan avenue.

"Alaska by Sea, Rail, and Air" is the subject of the natural color movie to be shown at the Fair store at 11 a. m. Friday. The talk will be given by Harold W. Snell.

Hot Springs Plans Christmas Carols

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 2 [Special].—Arrangements for this spa's community Christmas eve program of caroling and tableaux are nearly completed.

Mrs. Elizabeth Bowe Sims, director and originator of the fête, says there will be additional tableaux this year. The plan also calls for a highly trained group of adult singers instead of high school students.

Milan's Fair to Be Held as Usual

MILAN, Italy. — The 21st annual Milan Sample fair will be held as usual next year. It is scheduled to open April 12 with exhibits from more than a thousand firms. Despite the war in Europe, more than 25 nations are expected to be represented.

Jamaica Hangs Out "Business as Usual" Sign

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Dec. 2.—In order to facilitate tourist travel from the United States and Canada, the Jamaica government now permits in transit or cruise passengers who are not enemy aliens, and who are leaving the island on the same vessel and voyage, to land without either passport or visa.

Such passengers — including, of course, all Americans—will be given landing permits by the purser on their vessel. They will be permitted to remain in Jamaica for any period up to 48 hours.

All hotels and guest houses on the island are either open or will be by the beginning of the winter travel season. Steamship and air lines, as in former years, are serving Jamaica on regular schedules.

Estate Has 1,300 Plant Varieties

VERBANIA, Italy.—More than 1,300 varieties of flowers, plants, and trees are to be found in the gardens of the Villa Taranto, on the shore of Lake Maggiore.

Two hundred varieties of rhododendrons, 100 species of roses, 25 types of primulas new to Italy, and at least 1,000 plants never before grown in this country are included in the collection.

The estate was acquired and developed by Neil McEachern in 1933 and since then has been a mecca for artists and horticulturists.

New Light Shed on Broken Life of Capt. Lewis

By Frederic Babcock.

Last October this department told of a broken shaft symbolizing the broken life of Capt. Meriwether Lewis, co-leader of the Lewis and Clark expedition.

The monument stands in central Tennessee, near the site of Lewis' assassination. It "marks the spot" of the murder that has gone into the history books as one of the few unsolved killings of American notables.

Soldier and scientist, Capt. Lewis was named governor of Louisiana territory following his return from the exploration trip into the northwest. President Thomas Jefferson summoned him to a conference in Washington in the fall of 1809. He left New Orleans for the long journey, but he did not reach the capital. He was shot to death at Grinder's inn, on the old Natchez trace, on the night of Oct. 11.

This sketchy story was set forth in this section of THE TRIBUNE. Now come further details. They are contained in a letter from Miriam Mason of Pulaski, Tenn. She writes: "I am enclosing a letter written in 1810 from Natchez, Miss., by Mr. Grover Wilson, an ornithologist who was the first to reach Grinder's inn after the captain's death. Mr. Wilson gives in detail Mrs. Grinder's own account of the tragic event. His letter is authentic, but just how true Mrs. Grinder's story was will always be, perhaps, a matter of supposition. I shall be glad to send the original document, from which this copy was taken, should you wish to see it."

Grover Wilson's letter follows in part:

The next morning, which was Sunday, I rode six miles, to a man's of the name of Grinder, where our friend Lewis perished. In the same room where he expired, I took down from Mrs. Grinder the particulars of that melancholy event, which affected me extremely.

The house or cabin is twenty-two miles from Nashville, and is the last white man's as you enter the Indian country. Governor Lewis, Mrs. Grinder said, came thither at about sunset alone, and inquiring if he could stay for the night, and alighting, brought his saddle into the house. He was dressed in a loose gown, white, striped with blue. On being asked if he came alone, he replied that there were two servants behind who would soon come up. Governor Lewis then called for some spirits but drank very little. When the servants arrived, one of whom was a Negro, he inquired for his powder, saying he was sure he had some powder in a canister. The servant made no distinct reply, and Lewis in the meanwhile, walked to and fro before the door, talking to himself. Sometimes, Mrs. Grinder said, he would seem as if he were walking up to her. Then he would wheel around and walk back as fast as he could.

Supper being ready, he sat down, but he had eaten only a few mouthfuls, when he started up speaking to himself in a violent manner. At these times, she says, she observed his face to blush as if it had come on him in a fit. He lighted his pipe, and drawing a chair to the door sat down, saying to Mrs. Grinder in a kind tone of voice, "Madam this is a very pleasant evening."

Governor Lewis smoked for some time, but quitted his seat and traversed the yard as before. He again sat down to his pipe, seemed again composed, and casting his eyes wistfully towards the west observed what a sweet evening it was. Mrs. Grinder was preparing a bed for him, but he said he would sleep on the floor, and desired the servant to bring the bear skins and buffalo robe, which were immediately spread for him. It now being dusk, the woman went to the kitchen, and the two servants to the barn, which is about two hundred yards distant. The kitchen is only a few paces from the room where Lewis was, and the woman being, as she said, considerably alarmed, could not sleep, but listened to him walking backwards and forwards several hours, and talking aloud as she said, like a lawyer. She then heard the report of a pistol and something fall heavily to the floor, and then the words, "Oh Lord." Immediately afterwards she heard another pistol, and in a few moments she heard him calling out, "O madam, give me some water and heal my wounds." The logs being open and unplastered, she saw him stagger back and fall against a stump that stands between the kitchen and the room. He crawled for some distance, and raised himself by the side of a tree, where he sat for about a minute. He once more got to the room. Afterwards he came to the kitchen door but did not speak. Mrs. Grinder then heard him scraping the bucket with a gourd for the water, but it appears this cooling element was denied him.

As soon as day broke, and not before—the terror of the woman having permitted him to remain for two hours in the most deplorable situation — she sent two of her children to the barn, her husband not being at home, to bring the servants. On coming in they found him lying on the bed. He uncovered his side, and showed them where the bullet had entered. A piece of his forehead was blown off and had exposed the brains, without having bled much. He begged them to take his rifle and blow out his brains, and he would give them all the money he had in his trunk. He often said, "I am no coward, but I am so strong, so hard to die." He begged the servant not to be afraid of him, for he would not hurt him. He expired in about two hours, or just as the sun arose above the trees.

Governor Lewis lies buried close by the common path, with a few loose rails thrown over his grave. I gave Grinder money to put a fence round it to shelter it from the hogs and wolves, and he gave me his written promise he would do so. I left the place in a very melancholy mood, which was not much allayed by the prospect of the gloomy and savage wilderness which I was just entering, alone.

New Ski Runs Developed 50 Miles from City

A ridge of hills, half a mile long and from 160 to 190 feet high, is being developed into a series of ski runs 50 miles from Chicago. The project, as announced yesterday by Walter T. Stopa of 5037 North Mango avenue, calls for its completion by mid-January. The site is on the Wisconsin-Illinois border, half a mile south of Wilmot, Wis.

"We hope to provide the same facilities for which Chicagoans formerly have traveled hundreds or even thousands of miles," said Mr. Stopa. "We'll have open slopes, ski tows, and shelters. The slopes nearest the tows will be in such fine shape that two or three inches of snow will furnish good skiing."

The gradient will vary from 5 per cent for novices to 45 per cent for experts. Slopes will be from 450 to 1,150 feet long. They will face east and north, thereby retaining their snow long after it has disappeared elsewhere. The terrain includes a natural jumping hill of modest proportions. Floodlights will be turned on several nights a week.

6 Mile Route for Parade of Roses

PASADENA, Cal.—More than 60 floats already have been registered for the Tournament of Roses parade to be held in Pasadena on New Year's day. The floats will pass over a six mile route. Nearly two hours will be required to review them.

Life and Loves of Carol!

"I have the same right to happiness as the milkman has. No one is going to blackmail me out of what life has given me. I have but one life to live. I have never loved Princess Helen and I never will."—King Carol of Rumania.

The Strange Career of a Royal Playboy

By WILLIAM SHINNICK

THERE ARE TWO portraits of Carol of Rumania. One is the exiled prince of the booming 1920s, an irresponsible ne'er-do-well haunting the cafés of Paris—and with him his acknowledged mistress, a red-headed grass widow who aided him to defy his royal relatives and the conventions.

The second is of a hard-handed king almost unique in these times, a hereditary monarch ruling ruthlessly as the dictator over nearly twenty million people.

Both pictures are true. Time has changed King Carol. The spendthrift princeling has become the politician ambitious of power and wealth; the one-time slim romanticist is the portly executive of middle age, fighting to keep his country intact and his throne secure.

The task is not easy. King Carol may last long enough to pass the crown on to his son Michael. To do that he must have luck. Rumania, rich in agricultural land and oil, is coveted by the German Nazis and the unpredictable Russians. Any day one or both may roll their armies down from partitioned Poland to overwhelm its defenders.

If that happens King Carol will be an exile again (kings do not die on the battlefield). Perhaps Paris may see him in the old rôle again, and the red-haired Magda Lupescu in hers. Some of her charm has vanished with the years, but she is still one of Carol's closest and most trusted advisers.

The history of Rumanian royalty is brief. The country was a Turkish territory when in 1866 the political powers decided they wanted a king of their own and invited Prince Carol of Hohenzollern to take the place. He began his rule as a Turkish dependent, but thru the operations of European diplomacy Rumania was made independent in 1878 and Carol became a full-fledged king.

Thereafter he was little more than a vassal of Germany. His compatriots swarmed after him. Carol I. was able, ambitious, and greedy. He went into business, all kinds of business, and speedily became wealthy. He and his followers despoiled Rumania pretty thoroly. The people didn't protest audibly; they were used to oppressive government.

To assure the Hohenzollern succession King Cárol imported his nephew Ferdinand, an unstable sort who much preferred play and gay feminine companionship to the restraints of his royal place. He fell in love with Helen Vacarescu, a Rumanian poetess, and wanted to give up his regal rights to marry her.

This was forbidden by old Carol, and the impassioned couple fled together to Venice. The angry king followed. He stamped into the apartment of the lovers, dragged away his errant nephew, and passed a sentence of banishment on the poetess.

Thereafter Ferdinand was docile. Under orders he married Princess Marie of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, granddaughter of Queen Victoria, an Englishwoman who was later to become the busiest and the most talked-about queen in all Europe.

Marie was only 18 when her first son, Carol, was born in 1893. Other children followed; three daughters and a son. One might think that a family of five was sufficient to keep a princess busy. But Marie had too much energy and ambition to be tied to the nursery. (Continued on page four.)

New German Bombers Fly Far

Earlier model Junkers Ju86 heavy bomber.

Speed and Load Capacity Are Other Advantages

By WAYNE THOMIS

ONE OF THE newest machines developed for the German air forces is the Junkers Ju88 bomber. This airplane was just going into production—as much of production as is possible in a highly complicated mechanism such as a modern airplane—in the Junkers plant at Dessau last July at a time when foreign visitors were barred from the plants. I attempted to obtain permission from the air ministry at Berlin to visit the Dessau plant particularly to see the Ju88, but was refused at that time.

Interest in this machine had been aroused by a remarkable flight made on last March 19 by Ernst Siebert and Kurt Heintz, Junkers test pilots. They flew the prototype from the Junkers airdrome at Dessau to the Zugspitze mountain and back—625 miles, at an average speed of 321 miles an hour—while carrying a load of 4,400 pounds. Since then, during the month of August, a similar plane and similar load was flown for 1,250 miles at 311 miles an hour by other pilots.

Obviously this is one of the world's fastest bombardment planes. Details as to its exact dimensions and weights are not available, but it is believed to be quite small, with much the same lines as the French Amiot 370 bomber that is almost as fast with engines of slightly less power. The 88 is supposed to weigh 27,000 pounds fully loaded and have a span of approximately 75 feet.

It is built entirely of smooth metal sheet, and the wing has the usual Junkers multispar construction, that is very rigid and enormously strong. The twin tail units follow the Ju86 bomber design, but are aerodynamically much smoother and cleaner. And the engines hang mostly below the wing, much as did those of the North American bombardment plane, a machine built to compete in the American contest in which the Douglas B-18 was the winner.

The wing is typically Junkers in shape, with a wide root tapering on both edges to a fairly sharp tip. The invariable Junkers double-wing slotted flap and aileron are again used. Gun emplacements in the fuselage allow one gun to protect the nose, another above the tail, and one from the belly.

One of the most unusual features of the airplane is the engine installation. The motors are Junkers 211 injection V-12s, inverted. They give about 1,200 horsepower each at takeoff. These are liquid-cooled motors, and the radiator is arranged in a sort of collar immediately behind the propeller.

The arrangement gives these liquid-cooled motors much the same profile as air-cooled radials. Some of the details of this installation are disclosed in the accompanying drawings, showing the motor both cowled and uncowled. The Junkers motor in this form is a standardized unit that can be used on bombers, pursuit planes, dive bombers, or any other place that is suitable to engines of this power.

It can quickly be replaced with another entire unit, and it is said that all the accessories, including gearboxes, pumps, gun synchronizers, generators, etc., of a military motor are part of the engine unit. Such units are being used in a limited way by the United States army air corps and unquestionably will soon come into common use both in military and commercial flying.

Only one question arises from a glance at this installation. That concerns the efficiency of the cooling system. It is impossible to learn at this time the area of the radiator, but there have been many reports of difficulties in cooling the Junkers and Daimler-Benz motors used in Germany's bombers and pursuit planes. Similar troubles have been experienced with our own Allison V-12s and the double V 24-cylinder engine. It would be interesting to know how well the Junkers collar radiators function.

In the 88 for the first time the landing gear has been arranged to fold into the motor nacelles. This provides a wide gear, much wider than the usual Junkers gear, that in the Ju86 bomber folds into wells in the lower surface of the wing well inside the motors. The fact that the 88 has this wider gear suggests that its landing speed is considerably more than the Ju86 and the widespread gear is needed to allow pilots better control on the ground.

The Ju86 as shown in the drawing is an older, slower type of bomber. Its dimensions and loadings are: Span, 74 feet; length, 60 feet; weight, 30,000 pounds. The 86 is fitted with several different types of engines from the Jumo205 Diesel motors of 600 horsepower each to the B. M. W. radials of 945 horsepower each. Top speeds for the 86 vary from 210 to 235 miles an hour.

Reports are that the German air force also has several long-range four-motored bombers that are military versions of the Ju90 commercial plane which was completely described in this department more than a year ago. This big machine has a capacity for 42 passengers, a span of 115 feet, length of 86 feet, and a gross weight of 57,000 pounds.

It is probable that the bomber follows these dimensions closely, with perhaps a higher permissible takeoff weight, due to relaxing of many of the safety standards required for commercial flying. The motors on the Junkers four-motored bombers are said to be Daimler-Benzes of 1,320 horsepower each. They give the big ship a top speed of 280 miles an hour and a range with a 6,000-pound bomb load of approximately 3,000 miles.

Word from Germany is that the air force at one time had considered ordering these large machines in quantity, but that Ernst Udet, now a colonel general in charge of procurement of new airplanes, is opposed to large ships. His argument is that smaller bombers can fulfill all Germany's needs in Europe and that they cost approximately two-thirds less than the larger machines.

CONSTIPATION RELIEF

That Also Pepsin-izes Stomach

When constipation brings on acid indigestion, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, sour taste, and bad breath, your stomach is probably loaded up with certain undigested food and your bowels don't move. So you need both Pepsin to help break up fast that rich undigested food in your stomach, and Laxative Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels. So be sure your laxative also contains Pepsin. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative, because its Syrup Pepsin helps you gain that wonderful stomach comfort, while the Laxative Senna moves your bowels. Tests prove the power of Pepsin to dissolve those lumps of undigested protein food which may linger in your stomach, to cause belching, gastric acidity and nausea. This is how pepsinizing your stomach helps relieve it of such distress. At the same time this medicine wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your bowels to relieve your constipation. Who Are "Guilty Bystanders"?

"IF I SHOULD drag you into court and make you tell what you saw and heard, your clever friend, Murray Bentle, would tie you up in contradictions and twist your version of the story into a proof that Hugo was really insane when he killed Martin Yorke. Murray will stop at nothing. He'll make Hugo out a pitiable victim of his wife's misbehavior and his friend's treachery. He'll sing Hugo up to the skies as if he were the soldier and the savior of the American home.

"Do what I can, I doubt that I'll ever be able to convict Hugo of any offense whatever. About all I'll succeed in doing will be to subject a lot of unfortunate witnesses to a horrible ordeal. If I could see justice done I'd feel that no cost was too high and nobody should be spared. But why should I sacrifice your peace and your good name to a futile public scandal? No! I'm not going to trail your sweet soul thru the muck and then lose the case anyway. So I ask you to disappear."

"No! I'm not going to trail your sweet soul thru the muck and then lose the case anyway."

Kirke McKeel, the young district attorney of Rupert Hughes' novel in pictures, "The Guilty Bystanders," is speaking to the woman he loves—Phoebe Lockwood. She saw Hugo Ryder kill Martin Yorke and attempt to kill Mrs. Ryder when he found them together at a Lakemeadow Country club party. Now Phoebe is the central figure of the inevitable murder trial. Defending Hugo is McKeel's rival in courts and in courting, Murray Bentle, clever criminal attorney. Both want to save Phoebe the ordeal of being a witness, for both know that the defense tactics will be to blacken the prosecution witnesses.

The Yorke tragedy has darkened the lives of many more than these three. The family of the victim—the parents and the wife of the killer—even Murray Bentle's young brother, Dick. For Dick, getting over a dangerous infatuation for Mrs. Joe Cressy, has fallen in love with Doris Cade, sister-in-law of Martin Yorke, whose slayer Dick's brother is defending!

Hugo Ryder's parents are to be bled of their hard-earned savings in order to finance Murray Bentle's defense case. Edith Ryder is being forced into the false position of assisting Hugo, even tho it was his drunken abuse that drove her into the arms of Martin Yorke.

These are the characters in the cast of the tragedy. Hugo has pleaded "not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity." The public has discovered old, irrelevant, but superficially exciting angles to the case. The stage is fast being set for the courtroom drama.

HOW "AMERICA" WAS WRITTEN

By EDWARD BARRY

ON A BLEAK February day in the year 1832 a young student of the Theological seminary at Andover, Mass., stood before the window of his room turning over the pages of a volume of music. The book was part of a collection which had been brought from Germany by an American who had been sent abroad to study the German school system. It was a book used by children in the German schools.

The young theological student, whose name was Samuel Francis Smith, paid more attention to the music of the songs than he did to the words. He came to one whose melody immediately impressed him. It was simple, majestic, and seemed to lend itself admirably to use by large groups. He just glanced at the words, saw that they were of a patriotic nature, and quickly hit upon the idea of writing English words of a similar character to fit the music.

S. F. SMITH

Smith had a passion for writing on pieces of waste paper—"there seems to be a kind of inspiration in them," he later said—and he grabbed a scrap that happened to be close at hand. Still standing there by the window Smith worked industriously away. So well did inspiration serve him that at the end of about half an hour the poem was completed in substantially the following form:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died,
Land of the pilgrims' pride,
From every mountain side
Let freedom ring.

My native country, thee,
Land of the noble free,
Thy name I love;
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills;
My heart with rapture thrills
Like that above.

Let music swell the breeze,
And ring from all the trees
Sweet freedom's song;
Let mortal tongues awake,
Let all that breathe partake,
Let rocks their silence break,
The sound prolong.

Our fathers' God, to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing;
Long may our land be brigh
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by Thy might,
Great God, our King.

Smith put his poem away and all but forgot about it. Later, while visiting Boston, he entrusted John Mason with a collection of songs and hymns which he had written and it happened that the patriotic song was among them. On the Fourth of July of the same year Smith was agreeably surprised to find that Mason was using the song for a children's celebration at Park street church, in Boston. This same Mason later included "America" in a book of songs published for use in the schools. Even with the slower communications of 100 years ago and with the consequently greater isolation of each community the song was not long in making its way to other cities. Eventually it spread all over the country, to become a secondary national anthem as popular as and more singable than "The Star Spangled Banner."

Before attempting to trace the past and future history of the music on which "America" is based, it is interesting to recall that this Samuel Francis Smith is the man whom Oliver Wendell Holmes referred to in his famous lines:

And there's a nice youngster of excellent pith;
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith.
But he shouted a song for the brave and the free—
Just read on his medal, "My Country, of Thee."

So the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table joined in the conspiracy to make the composition of the words of "America" the central fact of Smith's life. It was nothing of the kind, of course. Smith was a great scholar, churchman, ... of hymns; and in his ... busy life that half ... tion on a dismal Febru... was the merest episode.

Smith knew that the ... was in use in Germany ... doubtful whether he knew ... it was already the national ... them of England, under ... title of "God Save the King" ... and certain that he did not ... that scholars were exercised ... the problem of how it had ... nated.

Scholars are still ... over exactly the same thing ... it is only fair to the reader ... preface these next few ... graphs on the melody's ... with the flat statement ... do not know for certain anything ... about its origin. Investigation ... has been going on in England ... since 1796, and there have ... contributions from other ... tries, too, but the body of ... lation which has grown up ... mains speculation and very ... else.

The song appeared in ... Gentleman's Magazine, an ... lish publication, in the year ... but there is reason to ... that a collection called ... rus Musicus, which also ... ried the song, may have ... published two or three ... earlier. The tune has ... ascribed to Henry Carey, ... Bull, Henry Purcell, and ... Oswald on the basis of ... and conflicting bits of evidence ... It is quite possible that ... these men wrote it.

It has been claimed, ... that the melody originated ... Switzerland as far back as ... The nuns of St. Cyr, in France ... believed that the tune was ... French origin and that it had ... been current in France in the ... seventeenth century. A German ... writer declared that it was ... Silesian, and that it had ... derived from a very early ... gical chant.

Whatever the origin of the ... melody, it caught men's imagina... tions in a great variety of lands. We find that the Dutch Free... masons were using it in 17..., that in 1790 it was published in Denmark as a song to be sung on the king's fête day, that it was later adopted as the na... tional anthem of Prussia and Saxony. Forkel, a pupil of Bach, composed a set of 24 variations on the tune. Weber and Beethoven both made use of the melody in their works. The latter gave expression in words also, to his liking for it—"I must show the English . . . what a blessing they have in their 'God Save the King.'"

Smith, if he had only known it, did not need to wait for a book of children's songs from Germany to stir him to inspiration, for the melody which he used had been published in America in colonial days. It appeared in a hymn book to the words, "Come Thou Almighty King."

The tune of "America" is perhaps the most widely known melody in the world.

Private Lives of Hollywood

By Ed Sullivan

Bette, Jim—a Pair of Rebels

Hollywood.

BETWEEN the two of 'em I suppose that Bette Davis and Jimmy Cagney have caused more headaches at the Warner Brothers studio in Burbank, Californi-ay, than any other dozen performers who have been employed there. To underscore this thought it should be pointed out that of all the major studios the Warner outfit caters less to players than any other. Their studio is conducted on a businesslike basis that takes no account of egos, eccentricities, and vanities. But Bette Davis and Jimmy Cagney, by strikes, picket lines, sitdown tactics, passive resistance, and other up-to-the-minute devices of labor resistance, have added gray to the Warner heads while adding shekels to the Warner bank roll. It might be added that just so soon as Bette and Jimmy pass that point where they are box office draws the brothers Warner will quite happily get even for all of this yearly annoyance and throw them out of the confines of Burbank, Cal., with a plague on both their houses.

This, however, is in the dim and distant future, because Bette Davis at the moment is the finest actress in the country and promises to maintain that superiority

JAMES CAGNEY

BETTE DAVIS

The famous Jim Cagney-Mae Clark grapefruit scene in "Public Enemy" which started the rough-and-tumble trend in the movies.

for the next five years. Cagney, temporarily in eclipse, has staged a Gargantuan come-back as the result of fine rôles in important pictures and recently was given a new five-year ticket.

Their Private Lives are very private indeed. Miss Davis and Cagney withdraw completely from the social life of the movie colony. Even in her divorce suit with Harmon Nelson, boyhood friend and band leader, little was spread upon the records about Bette's private life, and her romance with George Brent largely was confined to the movie sets. Cagney, happily married, prefers the company of Pat O'Brien, Spencer Tracy, and Robert Montgomery, interests himself in social movements that stir his sympathies mightily, and retreats as often as possible to the seclusion of Martha's Vineyard, 'way down east.

Of the two rebels of Burbank the rebellion of Bette Davis is more understandable. From the time that she was a youngster the cards seemed to be stacked against her, and only the courage of her mother declared a misdeal each time. In boarding school Bette's face was badly burned when the Christmas tree went up in flames. Only her mother's magnificent care prevented her face from being scarred tragically, but her pop-eyes were a permanent result. Her first stage application, to the Eva Le Gallienne company, then quartered in downtown New York, was rejected brusquely. Only her mother's courage in barging in upon John Murray Anderson in New York enabled the shy youngster to get her first part in a road company of "Broadway" with Stock Company Players Frank McHugh and Wally Ford.

When Bette arrived in Hollywood the old Universal company told her that she was too homely and that it would be as difficult for them to get rôles for her as it would be to get rôles for Slim Summerville, lugubrious comedian. Luckily she scored in a George Arliss picture, and as a result Pandro Berman and Director John Cromwell cast her in "Of Human Bondage," the flicker that was to establish her as one of the top-flighters of Hollywood.

Informality is Bette Davis' keynote. She loathes the typical Hollywood producer-star-director-agent party and, when she has to attend one, laughs privately afterward at their antics. Loathes more the Hollywood pseudo who gets verbally wrought up over the plight of victims of various mass oppressions six thousand miles away and fails to notice things that cry to be done right here at home.

Has no agent. Manages her own business affairs and does a remarkably smart job of it.

Loyal to friends and slow to make them. Takes her a little while to weigh the values of persons she meets. If they come up short weight they're off her list from then on.

One of her closest friends is her hairdresser, red-haired and shapely Margaret ("Maggie") Donovan. Maggie lives in an apartment in Glendale owned by rather elderly Paul Verity, who sunk his life savings into a really excellent color photography plant located in an out-of-the-way place near his apartment house. Thru Maggie Bette learned that Verity was having quite a hard time to get any one of means to look at his product. Bette devoted an afternoon to posing in front of Verity's cameras, knowing that pictures of her would get him thru doors of big advertising companies that had been closed to him before. And it worked.

Bette can't stand being fussed over on the set. It annoys her and throws her off stride, particularly when she's doing highly emotional scenes. She had finished the highlight scene of "Dark Victory"—the one on the stairway—and there wasn't a dry-eyed person on the set. Two or three people started toward her, bent on telling her how great she had been. She looked wildly about for an escape, and saw Casey Robinson, the author of the screen play.

"Casey, you so-and-so," she said, "you certainly threw one at us that time. It almost got me. Don't let it happen again."

Attack proved the best defense and she escaped the gush that would have been just too much for her at that moment.

Bette is also smart enough not to resort to scene stealing. In a scene for "Dark Victory" she refused to do a bit of business that would have taken the emphasis away from George Brent and focused it upon her. "It would be effective," she told Director Edmund Goulding, "but in the long run it would be bad. This is George's scene. He's dominating me." Goulding agreed she was right. That wasn't altruism, but the sound common sense of a person who knows that it's good pictures that keep stars stars.

The same uncompromising common sense—some may prefer to call it artistic integrity—caused her to insist that her head be bound up like a mummy's for the scenes of "Dark Victory" that showed her just out of the surgery after a brain operation. Dr. Leo Schulman, the medical technical adviser, wanted to give her a Hollywood bandage job; said it would look more attractive. She told him to do it right and never mind the looks.

Nondrinking, mild Cagney's rebellion might be traced to his boyhood in New York City, where his family didn't have much more than its share of worldly goods. Certainly that boyhood background would explain his interest in people who are less privileged, an interest that occasionally has caused his name to be cited as one of a group of movie players whose political philosophy inclines to the left.

William Keighley, who directed Cagney in "Each Dawn I Die," and again in the current "Fighting 69th," says Jimmy was just as independent, just as much the scrapper for what he considered his rights, in the old days before he entered the movies as he is now.

"I remember," says Keighley, "we offered him $225 a week to do the stage show 'Penny Arcade.' I happened to know he needed the job and the money at that time. But he held out for $250—and got it. With only $25 difference between us, he stuck to his guns. He'll do the same sort of thing today, but there's no stubborn cussedness in his independence. It's just a principle with him—the principle of a fellow who fought his way to the top on his own merits, without trampling on the rights of others in upholding his own."

Cagney says he has no desire to go back to the stage. Says he's cured because he believes pictures can do everything so much better.

He is tremendously interested in the career of his sister Jean. Beamed for days when Jean, after finishing her first picture for Paramount, was presented with a makeup case by admiring and well-wishing members of the crew. "Only actor in the cast to rate a swell gift like that," beamed Jimmy. "Thank the Lord she's a regular guy."

He loves to kid people, particularly fellow players in a picture, but knows he has a sharp tongue and is in constant dread of hurting some one's feelings. Once remarked rather lightly of the fact that Jane Bryan was turning her tears "on and off like a faucet." She was hurt. He spent half an hour apologizing to her.

Bette Davis, unafraid of uncomplimentary makeup, appears as Queen Elizabeth.

VOICE OF THE MOVIE FAN

Letters published in this department should be written on one side of the paper. If you wish a personal reply please inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Dear Miss Tinée: The first time I saw Rosalind Russell on the screen I was aware of the sensation of seeing a new, striking personality. I think you will agree the elect are like that—they project their presence and force your attention.

I saw her, of course, in "The Citadel," co-starring with Robert Donat, and I believe I've seen her in most of the pictures in which she has appeared. As far as I know there has not been much ballyhoo about her and yet I learn that she is to have equal billing with Norma Shearer and Joan Crawford in a new picture.

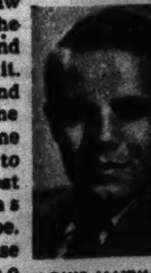
Miss Russell gives the impression of being a woman of education and refinement and Thespian reserve power that no director has ever been able to fully bring out.

How did she sneak up to the top without the usual posing in bathing suits and without having married a duke or something? Is it a new technique the movie moguls have adopted in her case? Who is she? Will you print a short biography?

Sincerely, J. W.

Editor's note: This is how she "snuck" up—only you couldn't call it sneaking, could you? I'd call it persevering. Miss Russell was born in Waterbury, Conn. Her father is a lawyer and her mother editor of a magazine. Appeared on the stage before entering motion pictures. Is under contract with M-G-M, and films in which she's played are "Evelyn Prentice," "Forsaking All Others," "Rendezvous," "China Seas," "It Had to Happen," "Under Two Flags," "Trouble for Two," "Craig's Wife," "Night Must Fall," "Live, Love, and Learn," "Man Proof," "Four's a Crowd," "The Citadel," and "Fast and Loose."

Dear Miss Tinée: It is interesting to note the different opinions people have on the same things. Recently I saw "The Man in the Iron Mask" and thoroly enjoyed it. All the actors and actresses did fine work, but the one who seemed to me to be the most outstanding was the twin Philippe. Could you please tell me who played the part and if he played both Louis and Philippe? Also a little about him and if possible print a picture of him. Thanking you very much, I remain sincerely yours,



LOUIS HAYWARD

N. SHEPPLAR.

Editor's note: So glad you liked the picture. Surely we can help you out. Louis Hayward played a double rôle in that film—he played the parts of Philippe and Louis XIV. Mr. Hayward was born in Johannesburg, South Africa, March 19, 1909. He's 5 feet 10½ inches tall, weighs 154 pounds, and has dark brown hair and blue-gray eyes. Educated in England. Married Ida Lupino, screen actress. Appeared on the stage in London and New York before entering motion pictures.

Dear Miss Tinée: Recently I saw "Lost Horizon" and would enjoy seeing it again. I think it is one of the grandest pictures I have ever seen.

I think Jane Wyatt is one of the best actresses in Hollywood. She has talent and everything else a good actress needs. I do hope, for Jane's sake, those Hollywood producers will wake up and use the talent they have. I think Jane and Franchot Tone would make a grand team.

Would you be kind enough to let me know how old she is, where she was born, etc.? I remain, hoping to see Jane in another picture soon,

ROBERT SILL.

Editor's note: Glad to help you out. Jane Wyatt was born in New York City, Aug. 10, 1913. Educated Miss Chapin's school and Barnard college. Joined apprentice school, Berkshire playhouse, in Stockbridge, Mass., and appeared in several stage productions in New York before entering motion pictures.

Strange Career of King Carol

The late King Ferdinand.
(Acme photos.)

Change from Playboy to Dictator

She went into politics. She planned on marrying her daughters to Balkan kings, or bigger kings if any were available. She engaged in undignified word battles with old King Carol. Her husband was thrust into the background, and deservedly so, for he was too weak to combat the politicians of his uncle's régime. She was not above exerting her unquestioned charm to further her plots for power.

Carol, her son, was a wilful lad and clashed with his mother while still in his teens. There is a legend that the little prince roundly cursed Prince Shtirbey, the politician most active in promoting Marie's schemes, and refused to retract at her order. Shtirbey never forgot. As Carol grew up, the Black Spider, as Shtirbey came to be known, put every obstacle he could in his way. Neither Shtirbey nor Queen Marie ever hesitated to broadcast the follies of the heir to the kingdom when their goals were at stake. And Marie was always an able publicist.

King Carol I., pro-German to the last, lived a few months into the World war period. When he died the half ridiculous Ferdinand took the throne. The power descended to Queen Marie, with Shtirbey as minister. Altho the queen's natural sympathies were with the Allies and had been made known during the old king's life, she forced France and England to bid high for Rumanian aid. So adroit was she that at the end of the war the monarchy received vast accessions of territory; so great an area that the population increased from six million to eighteen million.

The rollicking Prince Carol served, or rather held a commission, in the Rumanian army. He failed to distinguish himself as a military man. One general, Averescu, wrote a report in which he charged that Carol stayed drunk with other officers while his soldiers under difficult conditions fought without leadership. "He had sullied everything he has touched," was Averescu's verdict.

During the war Carol become infatuated with Jeanne (Zizi) Lambrino, daughter of a Rumanian general and one of the ladies in waiting of Queen Marie.

Carol takes it all back—the scene as he resumed his kingship after renouncing all royal prerogatives.

It has always been suspected that Shtirbey pushed the romance along as much as he could, to discredit Carol with King Ferdinand and the Rumanian people.

If this was his motive, he succeeded temporarily. Prince Carol deserted his army in war time (his troops were battling the soviet Russians then), fled across the hostile border and was married to Zizi in an Odessa church. The hubbub at home may be imagined. King Ferdinand wrote his heir a bitter letter. Queen Marie said cynically that Mlle. Lambrino was "both intelligent and ambitious." An able political leader, Jon Bratianu, gleefully confided to his friends that Carol would make possible the erasure of the Rumanian Hohenzollerns.

The unworried prince added to the sensation by announcing he renounced the throne. He said he was tired of politics and didn't want to return until "one strong man" could govern Rumania.

But a few months later Carol went broke and gave up his intransigeant attitude. Once on Rumanian soil, the king and queen and the politicians made him á prisoner and separated him from his wife. A little later they went into the Rumanian courts and had the marriage annulled.

Carol, who was allowed to correspond with Zizi, at the moment refused to acknowledge the validity of the court action. He wrote to his wife in terms of undying affection and guaranteed that he would acknowledge their son Mircea as legitimate. It must have been that with time his instinct for statecraft overcame his personal feelings. Before long he had consented to marry the Princess Helen of Greece, chosen by Queen Marie.

During the period of betrothal he made a trip around the world, visiting India, Japan, and America in addition to European countries. In America he adroitly sidestepped reporters trying to interview him on his love affairs. Duly married on March 10, 1921, he and Princess Helen returned to Bucharest and took up a humdrum royal life. For a time Carol remained friendly with Zizi, who often visited the royal palace. Then she was, in effect, banished; the fine hand of Queen Marie was seen in this development.

The scapegrace prince, reformed, took an interest in politics. But the ties of respectability galled and it was not long until he had a new woman friend. This one was Magda. She was a Jewess, daughter of a junk dealer, who had been married to and divorced from an army officer named Tampeano. She had resumed her maiden name of Lupescu. By all accounts she had great charm. Under her influence Carol forgot his responsibilities; he neglected Princess Helen; he was seen everywhere with his charmer. To the protests and warnings of his friends he replied:

"I have but one life to live. I have never loved Princess Helen and I never will."

The birth of his legitimate son and heir Michael in October, 1921, did not change Prince Carol's career. He was quoted as saying:

"I have the same right to happiness as the milkman has. No one is going to blackmail me out of what life has given me."

The stubborn Carol ignored criticisms; he persisted in his course even when his enemies—perhaps with the aid of Queen Marie—publicized his romance. The only thing that really affected him was King Ferdinand's order in late 1925 that banished the beautiful Magda.

Carol's political importance had been undermined and his pride was dealt a fearful blow. Temporarily he was beaten. Seizing an opportunity he joined the woman of his heart (the one of the three whom he did not marry) in Paris. His enemies rejoiced. Only King Ferdinand seemed sorry. Ill and surrounded by plotters, all but friendless, he sent an emissary to beg his son to return. Carol's answer was characteristic:

"I not only renounce the throne, but I renounce all the rights I now have; all the rights given to me by the Rumanian laws, over my child and over my wealth."

A sweeping renunciation, and Bratianu and Prince Shtirbey made the most of it in Bucharest. The crown council met, took away Carol's heirship and declared him no longer a prince, no longer a Rumanian citizen. It even took away from him the Hohenzollern name and christened him Carol Caraiman. Most important of all, the council decreed that the infant Prince Michael was to inherit the throne.

Carol took all such blows lightly. He became the exile of the legends; the royal lover who had given his all for a woman who would make him happy. Together he and Magda settled down in a cottage (in reality a handsome mansion) in the Parisian suburb of Neuilly.

His idyllic existence was interrupted in 1926 when Zizi Lambrino, also a resident of Neuilly but not a visitor to the Carol-Magda ménage, sued the prince in the French courts. She demanded recognition of the legitimacy of their son Mircea and a settlement of 10 million francs ($370,000).

There were rumors that Queen Marie had encouraged Zizi in this, and counter-rumors that Carol had threatened to tell Rumania how much money his mother and her advisers made personally by selling foreign capitalists the rights to exploit the country's oil fields. When the case came to trial it was weakly prosecuted and Zizi lost.

The playboy Carol was still in the ascendant when King Ferdinand died in the summer of 1927.

Bratianu and Shtirbey made the royal funeral the occasion for a huge display of military power. This was no idle gesture, in the eyes of the Rumanians not belonging to the ruling clique; it was a measure of defense against the return of Carol as king.

In an atmosphere of tension the ministry declared the 6 year old Michael king and established a regency of three—a priest, a judge, and Prince Nicholas, brother of Carol—to rule for him. Bratianu hastened to inform the people that King Ferdinand's last wish was that Carol should remain forever an exile.

Other stories, from sources not so exalted, gained credence. One was that the king had desired most seriously to recall the prodigal, and that the ministry had disregarded the request. A second attributed to Ferdinand a prophecy of the return of Carol.

As quoted, this tale was: Minister Goga, at the deathbed of the king, pledged that he would shoot Carol if he set foot again on Rumanian soil.

"Be careful that Carol does not shoot you," muttered Ferdinand.

It soon became apparent that dissatisfaction with the régime was rampant. The peasant party, altho somewhat awed by the military, began to agitate for a competent king. Carol in Paris ostentatiously donned a state uniform when he attended a memorial service for his father.

His prospects brightened further in a few months. Manoilescue, once prominent in the government, was placed on trial, the desperate Bratianu charging that he had fomented a Carolist plot. The defense was led by Carol's one-time critic, Gen. Averescu, backed by a battery of 102 lawyers. Bratianu and Shtirbey were defeated. Altho the evidence of conspiracy was clear enough, the Rumanian supreme court voted 3 to 2 for Manoilescu's acquittal.

Carol and Prince Michael on the visit to London when the Rumanian king WASN'T snubbed.

Still, Carol's time was not yet come. The government, upheld by the army, controled the purse strings and cut off his allowance. Princess Helen divorced him. Poverty drove him and Magda from Paris to Brussels and then to London. England found him plotting a return to Rumania and expelled him as an undesirable. He went back to Paris.

Months dragged on. The regency in Bucharest made its mistakes and did nothing to alleviate the misery of Rumania. Then Jon Bratianu, Carol's arch enemy, died. The peasants gained new victories and their leaders began to plot with Prince Nicholas for a return of the playboy.

All arrangements for a coup had been perfected when King Carol zipped into his country by airplane in June, 1930. Maniu, the premier of the peasant party, welcomed him and he marched like a conqueror into the Cotroceni palace. The army supported him and the people cheered.

Within two days a whole new set of laws had been passed. King Carol's renunciation of his rights was repealed. The [illegible] that he had been king [illegible] was adopted. The head [illegible] come home after a visit [illegible] that was all. He spoke [illegible]

"For those who [illegible] against me," he said, "[illegible] waits not the death penalty [illegible] any other. If my own [illegible] fulfilled they will reoccupy [illegible] old positions."

The late Queen Marie.

Among those who were [illegible] too trustful was Prince Shtirbey, the Black Spider. He [illegible] even from his business [illegible]. He could recognize a mailed [illegible] in a fur glove. Perhaps it [illegible] just as well for Shtirbey to [illegible] two days after his accession three of the new ruler's subjects, all men of prominence, [illegible] prosecuted for speaking [illegible]spectfully of the crown.

King Carol promised to [illegible] constitutionally. He planned a reconciliation with Queen Helen and a magnificent coronation which never came to pass. Helen resisted all his efforts and at length went to Italy to live. The king even made peace with his mother, and then forbade her to live in Bucharest.

There were comic opera aspects of the new administration. The king strutted about in general's or admiral's uniform and decreed that the rather drab soldiery wear more glittering garb. He introduced ragtime music and commanded that the military bands play it. Some good folk called him the king of the chocolate soldiers. And when it became apparent that Queen Helen was obdurate, he brought back Magda Lupescu.

Conditions didn't get better fast under Carol. He introduced press censorship. True, he [illegible] officials' salaries, but that only made them more avid of graft. Magda's friends and relatives fattened on the king's bounty and she was hissed in the capital streets. A college professor accused the king himself of grafting and went to jail.

Carol's manners disgusted some of his ministers, who objected to being called by their first names, forced to wear uniforms and take the slaps of the returned prodigal without complaint.

By 1933 suppressed groups were actively plotting the removal or, if necessary, the death of King Carol. The Iron Guards, an offshoot of the German Nazis, formed one such group. With cold efficiency they assassinated Premier Duca, who had outlawed them.

In 1934 13 persons were tried for a conspiracy to kill King Carol and Magda Lupescu. One of the defendants was Col. Prekup, who had risked his life to put Carol on the throne; he denied hatred of the king, but admitted trying to erase the charming Magda. He and the others went to prison for 10 years.

The affair with the Jewish woman was flaunted before the people, and when there was criticism the king had defenders.

"Those who do not sin," declared Prof. Jorga in a cynical apology, "usually do not because they are not able."

Another ex-Carolist, Maniu, was bitter against the siren. "As long as she is in the country," he asserted, "no one will accomplish anything good. She is responsible for all our evils."

The king was faithful to his mistress and sought to justify his own conduct.

"We have the God given right to order our own lives, follow our own sentiments," he argued. "That person is not human who is without faults. Even kings and queens have them. Is it not unkind to condemn a man for personal loyalty to his friends?"

Europe's more straitlaced royalty shunned King Carol. King George V. of England refused to mediate for him and Queen Helen, on the ground he "wasn't

A Novel in Pictures by

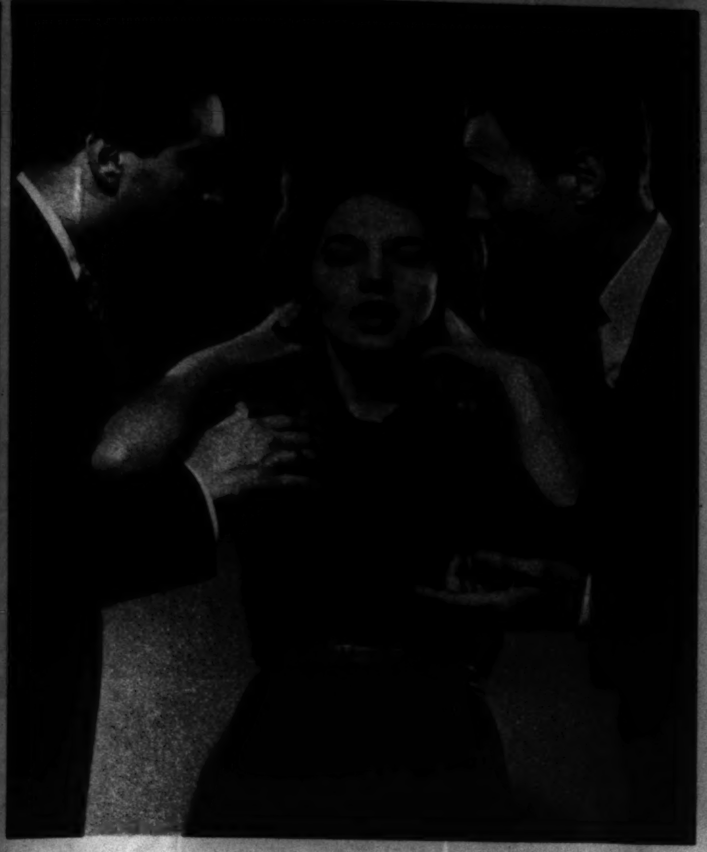
FOR SYNOPSIS TURN TO PAGE TWO

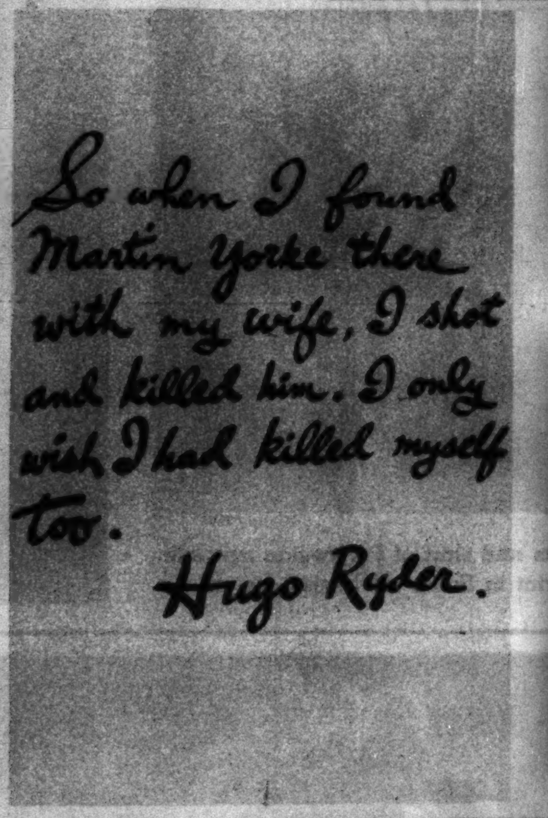


1 "No! You both know better than to ask me to go out with you the night before the trial. That's final." With those words Phoebe Lockwood dismisses Kirke McKeel and Murray Bentle, rivals in love, who on the morrow will again be rivals in court.

2 The Hugo Ryder murder trial has caught the public fancy. The gay country club setting in which the murder of Martin Yorke occurred, the prominence of the principals, Edith Ryder's dramatic "reconciliation" with the husband who found her in another man's arms, all have combined to draw a huge crowd.

3 "This man has taken a life!" says Kirke in his quiet but dramatic opening address. "Ten thousand murders are committed each year by just such men. It is a national disgrace!"

4 The speech is brief. Immediately the young district attorney begins to pile up the evidence he hopes will convict Hugo Ryder. "That's him," says an officer on the stand, pointing out Hugo. "I saw him sign the confession that he killed Martin Yorke."

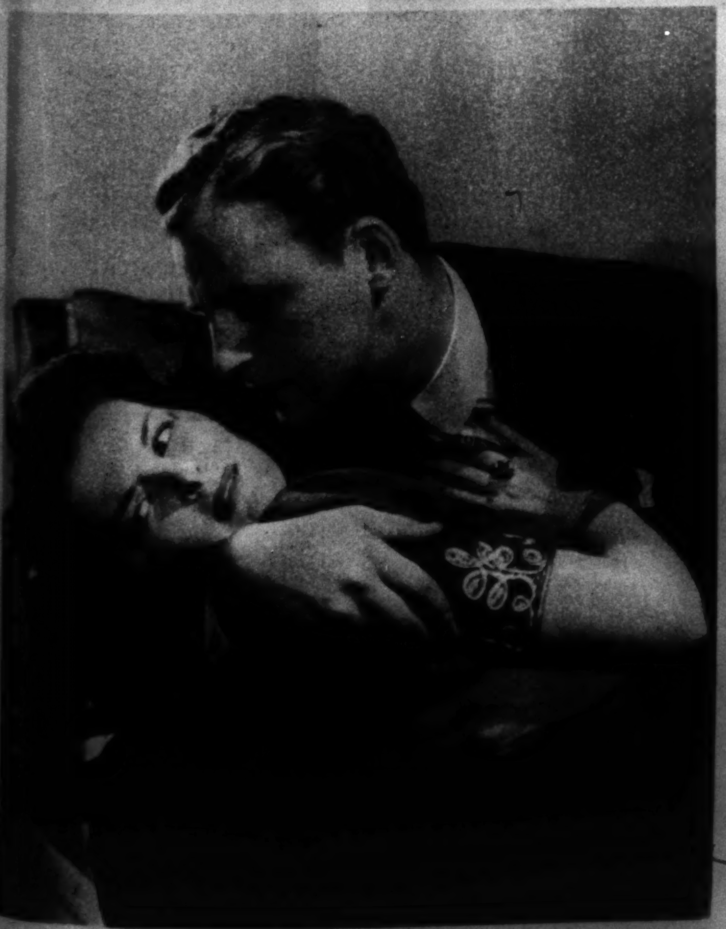


So when I found Martin Yorke there with my wife, I shot and killed him. I only wish I had killed myself too.
Hugo Ryder.

5 The confession itself is a damning piece of evidence—signed on that macabre night after Hugo had slain Yorke and then given himself up in remorse.

6 "Do something, Murray!" pleads Edith Ryder as McKeel relentlessly hammers home point after point against Hugo. "Take it easy, Edith," Bentle assures her. "I know what I'm doing."

7 Another drama also is being enacted, by another cast. Dick Bentle finds Doris Cade cool to his protestations of love. "Love!" she cries. "If you knew what love was you'd keep your brother from defending the man who killed my brother-in-law!"



8 "But, Doris, what my brother does isn't my business—or our business. All that matters is that I love you. It's hard for you to forget Martin Yorke, I know, but you must be reasonable."

9 Dick's kiss infuriates Doris. "Reasonable!" she screams. "Why, you beast . . . you . . . I hate you . . . I never want to see you again!" Her slap stuns Dick. "You'll be sorry you did that, Doris," he says slowly.

10 If Doris spurns him, Peg Cressy doesn't. Despite their brief affair and its stormy termination, climaxed by Joe Cressy's threat of harm to Dick, Peg tries to call young Bentle.

11 Grim, tense, Joe Cressy eavesdrops on his wife. "I said she wouldn't see Bentle again, and she won't . . . if I have to kill both of them!"

"Our dog was LISTLESS, DULL-EYED... till we tried a PARD diet!"

Listlessness—other common ailments—are very often traced to hit-or-miss diet. But they have never occurred among the exclusively Pard-fed dogs at Swift's Research Kennels!

● Leading veterinarians are out to end malnutrition in dogs. On malnutrition, the result of faulty feeding, they blame as many as 9 out of 10 cases of common dog ailments. Such ills as excessive shedding, dietary skin irritation, loss of appetite, and many others, while not serious in themselves, are sometimes the symptoms of grave internal disturbances.

Crusading veterinarians in fast-growing numbers are recommending Pard for all breeds. For Pard's nutritional balance has been thoroughly borne out in exhaustive feeding tests. On Pard alone—four consecutive generations of registered dogs were raised in fine health to perfect conformation to breed. None ever suffered from digestive upset—nor from the ills that often trouble less-well-fed dogs!

Have a good veterinarian give your dog a complete examination, to assure you that he is in sound condition. To keep him that way—feed Pard regularly!

A certified statement from the F. M. Masterson family, Chicago, Illinois.

"When we got Skipper, our wire-haired fox terrier, he was a pretty sad-looking pup. He was listless, dull-eyed . . . wouldn't play and had no interest in anything. And he hardly ate. Then someone told us about Pard, and we tried a Pard diet. Almost immediately Skipper started perking up. Soon he was the liveliest, healthiest puppy you ever saw. Since then, his only food has been Pard—and he hasn't had a single sick day."

Mississippi Beaten at Its Own Game of Cutoffs

● This is the second of two stories on cutoffs in the Mississippi river. Last week's dealt with changes in the river course made by nature, today's with those made by man.

By GREER WILLIAMS

THERE IS nothing unnatural about a flood. Glacier waters cut the lower Mississippi river a valley many miles wide thru which to flow. The river built a flat bottom in this valley as a flood plain. In dry seasons the river winds its way across this bottomland in a mere trickle from half to three-quarters of a mile wide and from fifty to a hundred feet deep. In wet seasons, when the rain in the north is unusually heavy, the river rises over its banks and covers the flood plain.

Man has found that the river floods on an average of once every 2.8 years. Nevertheless, since the days of Marquette, Joliet, La Salle, and De Soto man has elected to build cities on the banks of the Mississippi and to farm its fertile bottomlands. Thus the problem of flood control was of his own making. Since the Mississippi is not accustomed to staying within its banks, it is not surprising when it overcomes man's efforts to keep it there.

This it does from time to time. Nevertheless it appears that man is gaining ground on the river. Levees, dams, floodways, wing dams, and cutoffs are the combination of methods with which the United States corps of army engineers is trying to control the Mississippi. In each method the engineers take a tip from nature.

Rivers may deposit sediment along their banks and build natural levees or embankments. Rock and clay, which are difficult to cut thru, dam up the rivers at various points. Floodways resemble abandoned river valleys into which excess water empties. Breakwaters have their counterpart in a jam of trees and débris jutting out in the water.

Cutoffs, the subject here, are one of the commonest diversions of the Mississippi. They result from the fact that water, when it has sufficient force, will take the shortest route downgrade. Thus in low water the Mississippi is content to meander in sprawling loops across the flood plain. But in high water it finds too much resistance in a corkscrew channel and cuts across the loops.

Thus the engineers saw that the Mississippi's water would flow much faster and hence drain off greater volumes in flood time if the worst of its loops were cut off.

Cause and effect were worked out carefully in advance on a 1,100-foot scale model of the Mississippi river system at the United States waterways experimental station in Vicksburg, Miss. The station is operated by the Mississippi river commission, which is headed by Brig. Gen. Harley B. Ferguson of the army engineers.

The river itself gave the commission a working example in 1929 when a natural cutoff occurred at the Yucatan bend north of St. Joseph, La. Surprisingly enough, the cutoff took place during low water by gradual erosion. The channel gradually opened up without dredging. It was 2.6 miles across the neck at this point and 12.2 miles around the bend. Thus the river was shortened 9.6 miles.

The map shows the Yucatan and the twelve cutoffs dredged by the army engineers since 1933 between the Arkansas river and the Red river. The first was the Diamond, twelve miles south of Vicksburg. The last was the Caulk cut, five miles south of the Arkansas, which was begun in 1937.

The greatest single saving was at Caulk, where a two-mile cut eliminated 17.2 miles of river. The longest dredging operation was 4.8 miles at Glasscock, eliminating a 15.6-mile bend.

One of the most tortuous sections of the river was straightened out by the three cuts—Ashbrook, Tarpley, and Leland—near Greenville, Miss. Here the river contained four horseshoe bends, its course turning from south to north three times before continuing southward. The three loops cut off totaled 36.7 miles, whereas the distance thru the three dredged channels was 6.9 miles.

All told a river distance of 330.6 miles from Arkansas City to Natchez, Miss., was reduced by 115.8 miles. Enlargements of chutes and straightening of channel in the old river saved another 20 miles, thus placing the present river length between the two cities at 194.8 miles.

• • •

The advantage of the project to navigation is obvious. Steamers traveling at the same speed as before can make the reach from the Arkansas to the Red river in one-third less time than before, and with a far simpler problem of navigating around bends and sandbars.

All evidence to date points to a great reduction in the flood hazard.

The section between the Arkansas and the Red rivers has long been regarded as a bottleneck for the Mississippi's waters. The highest levees feasible were not regarded as adequate protection. Following the 1927 flood it was believed that a gigantic floodway thru the agricultural lowlands west of Vicksburg would be necessary.

General Ferguson now believes that the need for this highly controversial floodway has been eliminated by the greatly increased flow thru the new channels. Army engineers don't expect to see floods rise high enough to reach the spillway of the proposed floodway.

High water levels north of Vicksburg last spring were from ten to fifteen feet lower than those of the roughly comparable flood waters of 1933. The volume of water which the river above Arkansas City is capable of carrying has increased 71 per cent in six years.

While all the cutoffs are now navigable, dredging operations must continue to keep the mighty Mississippi in its channel. The government's dredges do not do all the digging. As the speed of the water is increased by channel straightening its own cutting force increases. With dredges setting the example, the river goes ahead and cuts its channel deeper and wider. This river bed erosion is known as scouring.

The engineers hope the river will not get lazy again in this chore.

When Worming for Tape, Round (ascarid) and Hook Worms

You Cannot Worm Your Dog WRONG

—if you follow the sound, "no-guess," commonsense Pulvex Worming Method.

The Pulvex Worming Method (embodied in every package of Pulvex Combination Treatment Worm Capsules) insures your worming your dog properly for those worms . . . even though you've had no worming experience. It is so sure that many breeders of champion dogs say the Pulvex Worming Method is the method the average dog owner should use. Here's why—

Your dog can have Tape, Round (ascarid), Hook or any combination of those worms at the same time. Your dog should, therefore, always be wormed for all those worms whenever you worm him.

Contrary to common belief, no single-type capsule made can expel all those three worms. Two distinct types of capsules must be used. Each package of Pulvex Capsules contains two types of capsules which, when given a few days apart, will expel Tape, Round (ascarid) or Hook Worms—not just one or two kinds of worms.

Avoid worming your pet wrong for those worms. Worm only with Pulvex Capsules. Packaged two ways: for puppies; for dogs. Either type package, 50c.

← ASK YOUR DRUGGIST to show you this Picturized Instruction Sheet. Thru a series of pictures, it shows you an amazingly easy, speedy way to worm your dog.

worth the bother." And when King George died and his fellow monarchs gathered to show him the last honors, Carol was snubbed. He was allowed to march in the funeral procession, but wasn't invited to Buckingham palace.

He shed the insult. He couldn't afford to be touchy, for the Nazis were looking hard at Rumania's oil and wheat fields. Apparently he leaned more to France and England than to Germany for an alliance; possibly because he feared the Iron Guards were implacable enemies; again, because he suspected the Nazis would take his country.

Those Iron Guards! They plotted his assassination and a dictatorship on the Nazi-Fascist model.

Carol wasn't killed, but Fascism came, and at his bidding. Early in 1938 he offered his subjects a new constitution which they had to swallow. It gave the king power to appoint half the senate and to veto all laws passed. Trial by jury was abolished and to all practical purposes Rumania was a totalitarian, corporative state.

Under the circumstances revolt was always imminent. A few months later 1,500 Iron Guards, including their leader, Corneliu Zelea Codreanu, were arrested, tried and sentenced to prison for a plot to murder the king. A sinister aftermath was the shooting of Codreanu last November "while attempting to escape from a concentration camp."

King Carol easily learned the technique of Fascism. About the time Codreanu was liquidated he abolished all political parties, including the Iron Guards. But the Guards, still numerous, campaigned to avenge Codreanu. Last September Premier Armand Calinescu was assassinated and the police announced they had foiled another attempt on the life of the sovereign. They may have to frustrate many more.

Abroad, these last few years, King Carol has had his moments. After Munich he and Hitler conferred at Berchtesgaden and parted on apparently amicable terms. The British, not to be outdone, invited the king and Prince Michael to London for a three day visit of state.

No snub this time. King George VI. and Prime Minister Chamberlain fêted Carol. The gold plates were brought out at Buckingham palace and there was willing talk of a Rumanian loan. All was friendship, sweetness, light. King Carol was worth bothering about. The French had already given him a handsome military medal.

Since the outbreak of the war Carol has carefully stayed neutral and has prepared to resist aggression, which is more likely to come from the soviets than from the Nazis.

Today's picture shows a dictator on a shaky throne, striving to hold on to what he has—his head, his job, his wealth, his importance in European politics, and Magda Lupescu. He has never renounced her.

Cats Have Their Day, Too

Sir Echo of Foxboro is the name of this silver tabby Persian, six months old, owned by Mrs. Thomas Robson of Chicago. It is competing for honors in the thirtieth annual championship cat show of the Beresford Cat club in Chicago. Silver tabby is the official name for one of the many cat classifications in shows.

HOW MANY cats are kept as pets in American homes always has been a point of argument between ardent dog fanciers and those who are partial to either a short or long haired feline pet. But there is no doubt that the cat, a free thinker and distinctive type of domesticated animal, is one of the most popular household pets in the country and makes an adaptable companion in many a home.

Thousands of cat fanciers have their eyes on the middle west this week-end, for in Chicago are assembled hundreds of sleek, well bred felines to compete in one of the outstanding cat shows of the year. The occasion is the fortieth anniversary show of the Beresford Cat Club of America, a club that is the pioneer organization of its kind in this country. Founded in 1899, the Beresford club also is the oldest cat club in the country. Its thirtieth championship show opened yesterday in the Skyline Athletic club, 188 West Randolph street, Chicago, and continues thru today, when the final awards will be made to the winners.

Mrs. George D. Kessler is president of the Beresford club and also the show manager. Mrs. J. J. Small of Chesterland, O., successful breeder of Persians (reds, blues, and silvers) and judge of previous cat shows in Indianapolis and Toronto, will pick the winners in this big show, which is a benefit for the Anti-Cruelty Society of Chicago.

Hundreds of well bred cats from more than ten states are competing in this anniversary show. Besides the Persians that make up the majority of the entries there are domestic shorthairs (popularly called alley cats), Siamese, Abyssinian, and tailless Manx cats in the show. Police and fire station cat mascots of Chicago have been invited to enter the show for special judging.

This cat, named Pete, was photographed by its owner, E. Ressel, member of the Jackson Park Camera club. Pete, owned by Mr. Ressel, also has been entered in the big cat show.

Santa Claus Shopping for Pups

IN RECENT years the idea of giving puppies as Christmas gifts to children fond of animals has grown tremendously. The American Kennel club has estimated that the number of puppies that moved into homes around the holiday season might reach a total of 400,000 to 500,000. A live, affectionate, playful little puppy makes a delightful gift for children, one that endures and becomes more valuable down thru the years.

There are several important things to keep in mind if a family is considering the purchase of a puppy to give to a child as a Christmas present. The prospective purchaser ought to give some thought to the breed that he would like to buy, and almost as much attention to the place where the puppy may be bought.

We always advise families about to buy a puppy for a Christmas gift to get one from pure-bred stock. The arguments in favor of a pure-bred puppy eligible for registration are so numerous that they hardly need to be listed. On the other hand, there are only two points in favor of the cross-bred or mongrel. First, he is all dog; and, second, he costs practically nothing. In many cases owners of cross-bred puppies are glad to give them away, a gesture which indicates the low value placed on the cross-bred as against the pure-bred. It costs just as much to feed a mongrel as it does a well bred pup. The price of prepared dog food is just the same for the family with an unregistered dog of mixed breeds as it is for one that has a pure-bred! Veterinarians who administer distemper inoculations to young dogs do not charge less for treating a cross-bred than they do a registered dog or one eligible for registration. Moreover, one always can be proud of a dog with a known pedigree, one that can be bred. A cross-bred is "the end of the line."

Any one buying a Christmas puppy will find it worth while to do business with reliable breeders, kennels, or others who have healthy dogs to sell. Many a family has written us about its troubles with "bargain puppies" which didn't live very long.

KNOW YOUR CAMERA

By ANDREW B. HECHT, Ph. D.

Humorous Christmas cards are highly popular. Your imagination and good taste are the limits of what can be done along these lines.

Photographer Fred G. Korth of Chicago combined montage, copying, and retouching to create this surrealistic card.

Christmas Cards Provide Field for Talent

● Questions of general interest to camera fans will be answered from time to time in this department. It will not be possible to print or mail replies to inquiries of a purely individual character. Address questions to "Know Your Camera," Chicago Tribune.

IF YOU ARE proud of your photographic hobby and are an amateur of even small experience there is no better occasion than Christmas to show your friends just what you can do with your camera. Make up your own photographic Christmas card, giving your greetings the personal note that only an individualized card can convey, and at the same time demonstrate your individual skill in photography.

Now is the time to start work on your photographic Christmas card, for even tho many a card is simple to make, the finishing of cards in quantity takes time.

There is little advice you can expect from others as to the selection of a subject for your card. You may be satisfied with a beautiful winter scene or a table top setting imbued with Christmas atmosphere. Or you may want to create a picture which includes yourself and members of your family or indicates your profession or hobbies.

Let us assume that you have selected the subject of your card. The simplest thing to do is to take your negative to a commercial finisher, who will make straight prints from it and mount these on printed cards. Or you may purchase blank cards with printed sentiment, make prints from your negatives, and mount these on the cards. These, of course, are rather primitive versions of photographic Christmas cards.

The next best grade makes use of Christmas card kits obtainable at photo dealers. In these kits you will find printing masks to frame your own shot and negatives of sentiments which you can print in conjunction with your own negative. In this manner the greetings will be incorporated into the photograph you use and you can sign your name with a pen to the finished card.

If you are really ambitious you will make the entire card yourself. In doing so your biggest problem will be to incorporate the greeting into the picture you select. There are several methods of doing this. The simplest is to photograph the greeting together with the picture. Letter the greeting on a large card and have one of your subjects hold it, or place it otherwise in the picture space. In case of table tops you can write the greeting in sand or "snow," or you can use letters made of paper or wood to set up your greeting.

If you cannot apply this method, write your message with opaque ink on the shiny side of your negative, above a light area. This section will print dark and your lettering will appear white. You can put your lettering on a separate sheet of celluloid and print it together with your negative. Another method is to write it with a soft pencil directly on the printing paper before the latter has been exposed. Then make your print. After developing you will find that the paper has remained white under the opaque pencil marks.

Lay out your card in such a manner that it will fit standard sizes of contact or projection paper. In this manner there will be no waste of paper. Papers are available in a great variety of surfaces, colors, and effects. In selecting your papers make sure that you can get envelopes which will match your card both in size and color.

The simplest type of Christmas card consists of a single sheet, which can be used unmounted or mounted. Single weight is best for mounting. The more elaborate cards are either of the single fold or of the French fold type. The former has the emulsion usually on the inside, the latter on the outside. Select a paper which can be folded without breaking and see to it that the finished card stays flat and does not curl.

If you want your Christmas cards to stand out and be remembered, make them yourself, and make them photographic.

FOR GOODNESS CAKES!

That famous snow cake again! The recipe is in the 5-cent "Holiday Cookies and Fruit Cakes."

By MARY MEADE

AS SOON as December rolls around the last procrastinating cook dons her apron to make those fruit cakes she "just couldn't get around" to making before. Christmas is nearing, so fruit cakes should be ready, and recipes for other holiday cakes should be at hand.

The white cake in the picture is the record-breaking Christmas snow cake which thousands of our readers have baked for two Christmases now. It consists of two lovely, fluffy white layers put together with an eggnog filling made with fruits and nuts. The frosting may be a boiled or seven-minute icing.

In the past we have sent out individual recipes for this cake, but this year snow cake is available in a booklet, together with our favorite fruit cake and Christmas cookie recipes. "Holiday Cookies and Fruit Cakes," snow cake included, is yours for 5 cents by mail.

Here's a fruit cake which is less expensive than most. It contains currants, raisins, citron, and nuts.

The fruit cake in the picture is an economical one; in fact, "economical" is its name.

ECONOMICAL FRUIT CAKE
(10 pounds)

- 2 pounds currants
- 2 pounds seeded raisins
- 1 pound citron, chopped
- 1 pound almonds, blanched
- 2 pounds pecan meats, broken
- 2 cups fruit juice (grape, pineapple, or other)
- 1 cup butter or margarine
- 1 cup sugar
- 6 eggs, well beaten
- 3½ cups flour
- 1½ teaspoons cinnamon
- 1 teaspoon allspice
- 1 teaspoon cloves
- 1 teaspoon soda

Prepare fruits, mix and place in a large crock. Pour fruit juice over them and let stand overnight. Sift spices, soda, and flour together three times. Cream butter, add sugar, and beat until light. Add eggs and flour mixture alternately, carefully mixing after each addition. Add nuts gradually, distributing them well thru the batter. Add fruits a small amount at a time and mix well. Bake in greased paper-lined loaf pans at 300 degrees, slow oven, for three hours. Allow cakes to cool in the pans. Glaze and decorate with candied fruits and nuts.

TO GLAZE: Brush the tops with a sirup made by cooking ⅓ cup sugar, ⅓ cup corn sirup, and ¼ cup water until it thickens, but not long enough for it to spin a thread. Press fruit and nuts into the glaze.

Soft Petaling Beauty

Fragrant bouvardia and delicate dendrobian orchids form this floral headdress for upswept curls.

(Posed by Susan Hayward.)

There's a glamorous new style in fresh flower arrangements that will double your romantic appeal.

Sweet peas form this ... cup and matching ...

By ANTOINETTE DONNELLY
(Copyright: 1939: News Syndicate Co., Inc.)

THIS IS YOUR season to add that touch of romance, of glamor, of sheer feminine charm, with the aid of fragrant blossoms.

Whether you're an advocate of the bustle hair-do, pompadour curls, or the Hollywood long bob, there's a glamorous new style in fresh flower arrangement that will double your romantic appeal for those special holiday and party occasions. Flowers in the hair, of course, have been a recipe for glamor for ages and ages, but today you're asked to choose or have chosen for you a fresh flower arrangement that augments your particular style of beauty.

We see a further yearning for flowers as head decoration in chapeaux glimpsed here and there in dining places. For instance, at a thrilling fashion event there was paraded before our eyes a dream of a blonde in ice blue satin frock, and in her hair was a snood of tiny baby orchids strung on blue mesh. Flowers are that plus factor on a pretty maid that breeds sentiment along with eye appeal.

If your face is the triangular type a rounded halo of fragrant blossoms will dramatize your beauty most effectively. Gardenias, carnations, roses, lilies, or small orchids are a glamorous choice. A full, round face will be slimmed becomingly if you pin your flowers very high, especially effective for an evening headdress. A bowknot of fresh flowers is an exotic way to emphasize the beauty of curls that are worn in the topknot style that's so becoming to full faces. Lilies of the valley and sweetheart roses are easy to arrange in this way.

Small chrysanthemums or gardenias can be used effectively to soften the profile if worn on a band pinned low on the neck. If you wear your curls swept back, earrings of tiny orchids are a glamorous choice that will flatter your features. But never wear flower earrings if your face is round.

A snood of fresh flowers is a charming new fashion for 1939 holidays that borrows a favorite beau-catching device of our grandmothers. Grecian arrangements of flower petals and leaves are effective if your favorite party coiffure is a Grecian roll.

If your face is round and very young you'll be sure to win the hearts of the stag line if you choose a topknot bonnet of gardenias or rubrum lilies that ties coquettishly under your chin. If yours is a swirled hair-do you'll qualify as a reigning belle if you wear one of the new headdresses of fragrant blossoms with back streamers of petals.

A Juliet cap of fragrant sweet peas is a youthful choice if you're a sub-deb attending your first formal party. And for added glamor you'll want a ring of the same blossoms to dramatize your pretty hands.

A too thin neck is no cause for complaint when you're dressed for the big party! A necklace of fresh camellias and valley lilies will fill in the hollows and enhance the beauty of your ... at the same time. Purple ... and pink carnations would ... attractive, too.

When you're wearing a ... sage, follow the rule that ... know makes your flowers ... most attractive and last ... Wear them with the stems ... After all, that's the way ... grew them!

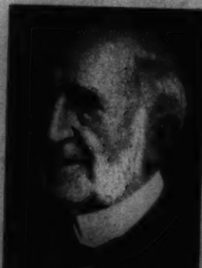
For the demure miss, select sweetheart roses or lilies of the valley arranged like an old-fashioned bouquet in a lace-edged ... container.

ON APRIL 30, 1889, the one hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States of America, a celebrated American statesman and lawyer delivered an address on the site of old Federal hall in New York City that has been accepted as a masterpiece of oratory. The speaker was Chauncey M. Depew, who later served as United States senator from New York. His tribute to Washington follows:

Gems of American Eloquence

American eloquence has played an important part in the history of our country. From a long list of famous speeches The Tribune is selecting gems of American eloquence which are being presented in this, the Graphic Section, every Sunday. The content of these speeches is important both historically and politically. Men and boys learning to speak in public will find in them helpful lessons. Speakers and writers can learn a great deal from studying their style. This is the twenty-sixth of the series.



C. M. DEPEW

"No man ever stood for so much to his country and to mankind as George Washington. Hamilton, Jefferson, and Adams, Madison and Jay each represented some of the elements which formed the Union. Washington embodied them all. They fell at times under popular disapproval, were burned in effigy, were stoned, but he with unerring judgment was always the leader of the people. Milton said of Cromwell that 'war made him great, peace greater.' The superiority of Washington's character and genius was more conspicuous in the formation of our government and putting it on indestructible foundations than in leading armies to victory and conquering the independence of his country. 'The Union in any event' is the central thought of his farewell address; and the years of his grand life were devoted to its formation and preservation. He fought as a young man with Braddock and in the capture of Fort Duquesne for the protection of the whole country. As commander in chief of the Continental army his commission was from the congress of the united colonies. He inspired the movement for the republic, was the president and dominant spirit of the convention which framed its constitution, and its President for eight years, and guided its course until satisfied that, moving safely along the broad highway of time, it would be surely ascending toward the first place among the nations of the world, the asylum of the oppressed, the home of the free.

"Do his countrymen exaggerate his virtues? Listen to Guizot, the historian of civilization: 'Washington did the two greatest things which in politics it is permitted to man to attempt. He maintained by peace the independence of his country which he conquered by war. He founded a free government in the name of the principles of order and by reëstablishing their sway.' Hear Lord Erskine, the most famous of English advocates: 'You are the only being for whom I have an awful reverence.' Remember the tribute of Charles James Fox, the greatest parliamentary orator who ever swayed the British house of commons: 'Illustrious man, before whom all borrowed greatness sinks into insignificance.' Contemplate the character of Lord Brougham, preëminent for two generations in every department of human activity and thought, and then impress upon the memories of your children his deliberate judgment: 'Until time shall be no more will a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and virtue be derived from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington.'

"Chatham, who with Clive conquered an empire in the east, died broken-hearted at the loss of the empire in the west by follies which even his powerful eloquence could not prevent. Pitt saw the vast creation of his diplomacy shattered at Austerlitz, and fell murmuring: 'My country! How I leave my country!' Napoleon caused a ... tribute to Washington to be ... at the head of his armies, but, unable to rise to Washington's greatness, witnessed the vast structure erected by conquest and cemented by blood, to minister to his own ambition and pride, crumble into fragments, and an exile and a prisoner he breathed his last, babbling of battlefields and carnage. Washington, with his finger upon his pulse, felt the presence of death, and, calmly reviewing the past and forecasting the future, answered to the summons of the grim messenger, 'It is well,' and as his mighty soul ascended to God the land was deluged with tears and the world united in his eulogy. Blot out from the page of history the names of all the great actors of his time in the drama of nations, and preserve the name of Washington, and still the century would be renowned."

There is always a tendency on the part of any people to deify national heroes. Orators eulogize them, writers create legends about them. In this process of deification such capable and popular speakers as Chauncey Depew have been chief sculptors. In this speech Depew's technique is evident enough; he relies on the forceful use of names. Hamilton, Jefferson, Cromwell, Erskine, Fox, Chatham, and Clive, Napoleon; these resounding names Depew sets in contrast to Washington's greater one. Great as these men were, he suggests, they were only men; but Washington, as his life and death show, was more than that.—Comment by Martin Maloney of Northwestern university school of speech.

SOMEONE OUGHT TO TELL HER ABOUT RY-KRISP!

Now! New, simple plan to lose ugly fat—
No drastic diet, no exhausting exercise

Do you dread "going on a diet" and taking exhausting exercises in order to reduce? Then send now for free Ry-Krisp booklet which tells how to eat what you like and lose weight . . . gives plan for losing 7 pounds a month.

HERE'S PLAN IN BRIEF

1. Eat sensibly. Following Ry-Krisp plan, a normal person can eat what he likes and lose about ¼ pound a day.

2. Exercise moderately. Take a brisk walk each day or regular amount of any exercise.

3. Enjoy 2 or 3 Ry-Krisp wafers as your bread at each meal. Ry-Krisp, made of pure whole rye with no sugar or fats added, has only 20 calories per wafer—yet is a source of energy and helpful bulk.

In using this plan, insist on genuine Ry-Krisp in the red-and-white checkerboard box with the name baked in every wafer. Serve these delicious rye wafers as an every-meal bread to enjoy with soups, salads, fruit juices. Ask for Ry-Krisp on trains, planes, at hotels. Order Ry-Krisp from your grocer and start now to lose fat this simple way.

Free Reducing Booklet—gives plan for losing 7 pounds a month. State whether for man or woman. Address Ry-Krisp, 754-D Checkerboard Square, St. Louis. Offer good only in U. S. and Canada.

Give Him an EXTRA BATHROOM for Christmas!

SCHICK "POCKET DRESSING ROOM" KIT, featuring the new "Colonel" model. With mirror, comb and exclusive new "Whisk-it". In luxurious case, styled by Raymond Loewy, $17.50. Other Schick Dry Shavers in attractive gift packages. The new "Colonel" $15.00, de luxe model, $16.50. The new "Captain" at $12.50. (All with the new "Whisk-it" at no extra cost.)

FREE! With all Christmas Schick Dry Shaver models, a new improvement, the "Whisk-it". Fitted to the shearing head, it catches all whisker clippings, removes last vestige of fuss and muss from shaving. Takes shaving out of the bathroom. Permits shaving anywhere, at home or office, before or after dressing!

He can shave after dressing, if he likes, as he reads his morning newspaper, or looks over his morning mail.

Now he can shave anywhere in the house; any electric outlet becomes an extra bathroom, so far as shaving is concerned.

SCHICK DRY SHAVER LEADS AGAIN with another big advance in electrical shaving. An exclusive improvement that ends the morning bathroom jam—permits shaving anywhere!

The "Whisk-it" comes with every Christmas Schick Dry Shaver . . . that's our special Christmas bonus for your man. But above all, he'll welcome the Schick Dry Shaver itself. Because it means years of civilized, nickless, painless shaving. No more expense for blades, soaps and lotions. Freedom from razor-blade skin. When you give him a Schick Dry Shaver, you give him the best.

Of the millions of dry shavers in use today, more than half are Schicks. Many imitators have gone as far as they dared in infringing Schick Dry Shaver patented principles. But compromises, made in their efforts to conceal infringement, have kept imitators far behind Schick in efficient, dependable performance.

No other dry shaver offers the advanced improvements found in the new 1940 Schick.

Powered by a real Universal Motor . . . not merely a vibrating mechanism. Operates on AC or DC, with smooth, uniform power—no annoying vibration. Insures uniform cutting speed. That's why the Schick Dry Shaver gives a cleaner, smoother shave—with no jerks—no pull.

Faster Shaves . . . New hi-speed, "frictionless" motor, 50% faster, more powerful than former Schick "Standard" Dry Shaver.

Cleaner Shaves . . . Exclusive patented "Speed King" shearing head whisks off beard clean and close. Each hair is sliced closely with no nicks, cuts or skin irritation possible, because unique "wedge" slots make it impossible for skin to touch scissor-action.

. . . and, on those mornings when he oversleeps, he can skip shaving entirely until after he gets to the office.

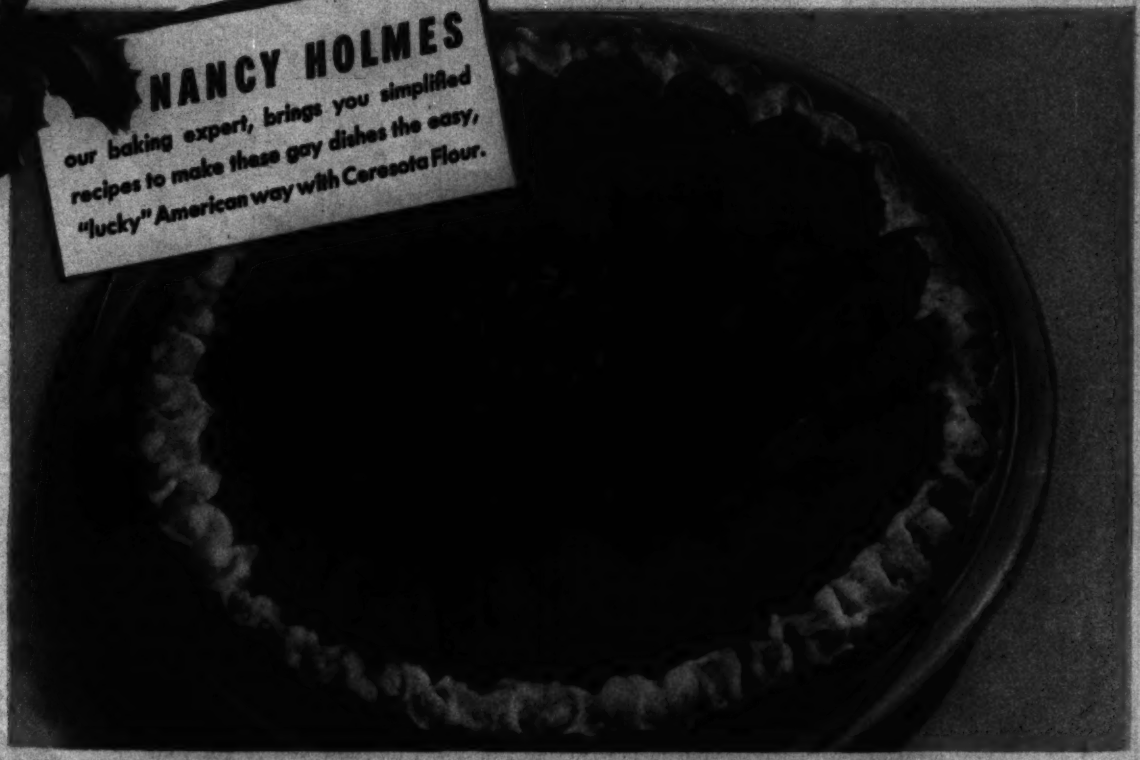
PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE.

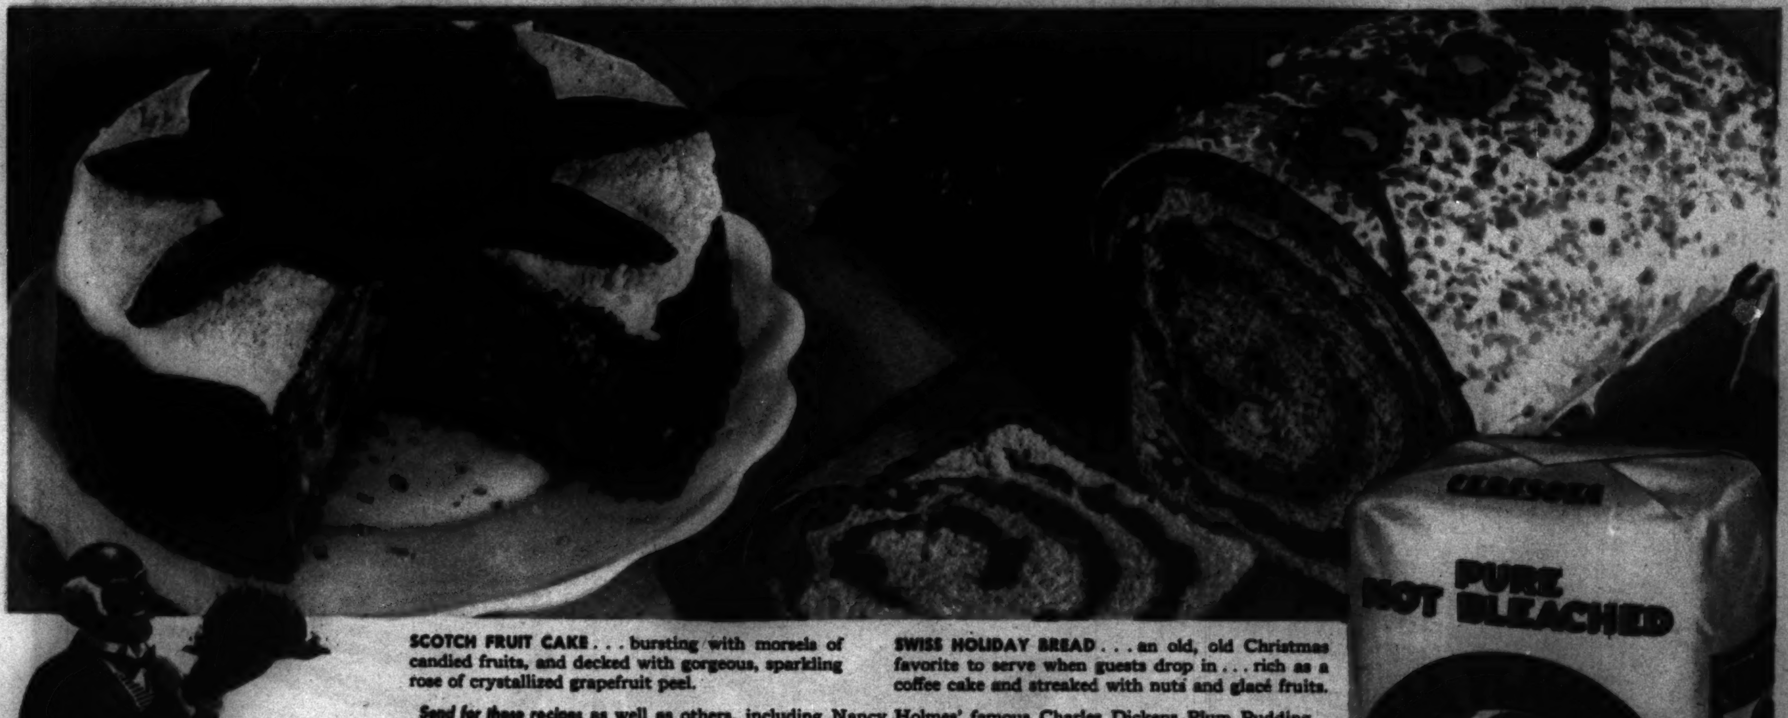
Bake and be Merry

with these holiday foods from other lands

NANCY HOLMES our baking expert, brings you simplified recipes to make these gay dishes the easy, "lucky" American way with Ceresota Flour.



FLORENTINE PIE . . . Apple pie! America's favorite—in a colorful holiday version that comes from the gay old city of Florence.



SCOTCH FRUIT CAKE . . . bursting with morsels of candied fruits, and decked with gorgeous, sparkling rose of crystallized grapefruit peel.

SWISS HOLIDAY BREAD . . . an old, old Christmas favorite to serve when guests drop in . . . rich as a coffee cake and streaked with nuts and glacé fruits.

Send for these recipes as well as others, including Nancy Holmes' famous Charles Dickens Plum Pudding.

These old family Christmas recipes have been discovered for you, by Nancy Holmes, in American homes where they have been handed down from grandmother to granddaughter.

They recall Christmas of long ago . . . sleigh bells jingling on the frosty air . . . ovens giving out fragrance of cinnamon and sugar and currants and spice.

We hope you'll bake these good things with Ceresota Flour, just as they are being baked by the women who gave the recipes to Nancy Holmes. For these festive foods—and for all your Christmas cookies and pies, coffee cakes and fruit cakes—you need the finest flour . . . and that's just another way of saying Ceresota Flour.

Many women say they are "lucky" with Ceresota. But what they call "luck" is science to us—and the science is Ceresota's gluten content—just the right amount to mix faster, rise higher, go farther, and keep things fresh longer. So get a bag of Ceresota Flour—"Bake and be merry" at your home!
